Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower
By Jeff Gannon
Talon News
December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Re: F-2018-02283; Civil Action No. 18-cv-2143

Dear Ms. France:

This is a final response to the 08 August 2018 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request submitted by your clients, Richard Blumenthal, et al., for the following records involving Brett Kavanaugh during his time as an associate in the White House Counsel's office from January 2001 to July 2003 and as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006:

1. All records, including but not limited to emails, memoranda, print or other correspondence, notices, attachments, and directives addressed to, from, carbon copying (cc'ing), or blind carbon copying (bcc'ing) Mr. Kavanaugh.
2. All records, including but not limited to emails, memoranda, correspondence, notices, and directives, discussing or mentioning Mr. Kavanaugh.
3. Records relating to Mr. Kavanaugh's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.
4. To the extent they are not included in response to categories (1) through (3), all records containing documents written by, edited by, prepared in whole or part by, under the supervision of, or at the direction of Mr. Kavanaugh, as well as documents referencing Mr. Kavanaugh by name, initials, or title, and documents received by or sent to him.

We processed the request in accordance with the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as amended, and the CIA Information Act, 50 U.S.C. § 3141, as amended.

We completed a thorough search for records responsive to the request and located two hundred and seventy (270) responsive documents. Two (2) documents may be released in their entirety and sixteen (16) may be released in segregable form with redactions made on the basis of FOIA exemptions (b)(3), (b)(5) and/or (b)(6). We also determined two hundred and sixteen (216) must be denied in their entirety on the basis of FOIA exemptions (b)(1), (b)(3), (b)(5), and (b)(6). Exemption (b)(3) pertains to Section 6 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949, as amended, 50 U.S.C. § 3507, noted as exemption "(b)(3)CIAAct," and/or Section 102A(i)(1) of the National Security Act of 1947, as amended, 50 U.S.C. § 3024(i)(1), noted as exemption

“(b)(3)NatSecAct” on the enclosed documents. The remaining thirty-six (36) documents were determined to belong to other government agencies. These documents have been referred to those agencies for a direct response to you.

This concludes our response to the referenced request.

Sincerely,

SENSITIVE COMPARTMENTED INFORMATION NONDISCLOSURE AGREEMENT

An Agreement Between BRETT MICHAEL KAVANAUGH and the United States
(Name - Printed or Typed)

1. Intending to be legally bound, I hereby accept the obligations contained in this Agreement in consideration of my being granted access to information or material protected within Special Access Programs, hereinafter referred to in this Agreement as Sensitive Compartmented Information (SCI). I have been advised that SCI involves or derives from intelligence sources or methods and is classified or is in the process of a classification determination under the standards of Executive Order 12958 or other Executive order or statute. I understand and accept that by being granted access to SCI, special confidence and trust shall be placed in me by the United States Government.

2. I hereby acknowledge that I have received a security indoctrination concerning the nature and protection of SCI, including the procedures to be followed in ascertaining whether other persons to whom I contemplate disclosing this information or material have been approved for access to it, and I understand these procedures. I understand that I may be required to sign subsequent agreements upon being granted access to different categories of SCI. I further understand that all my obligations under this Agreement continue to exist whether or not I am required to sign such subsequent agreements.

3. I have been advised that the unauthorized disclosure, unauthorized retention, or negligent handling of SCI by me could cause irreparable injury to the United States or be used to advantage by a foreign nation. I hereby agree that I will never divulge anything marked as SCI or that I know to be SCI to anyone who is not authorized to receive it without prior written authorization from the United States Government department or agency (hereinafter Department or Agency) that last authorized my access to SCI. I understand that it is my responsibility to consult with appropriate management authorities in the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to SCI, whether or not I am still employed by or associated with that Department or Agency or a contractor thereof, in order to ensure that I know whether information or material within my knowledge or control that I have reason to believe might be SCI, or related to or derived from SCI, is considered by such Department or Agency to be SCI. I further understand that I am also obligated by law and regulation not to disclose any classified information or material in an unauthorized fashion.

4. In consideration of being granted access to SCI and of being assigned or retained in a position of special confidence and trust requiring access to SCI, I hereby agree to submit for security review by the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to such information or material, any writing or other preparation in any form, including a work of fiction, that contains or purports to contain any SCI or description of activities that produce or relate to SCI or that I have reason to believe are derived from SCI, that I contemplate disclosing to any person not authorized to have access to SCI or that I have prepared for public disclosure. I understand and agree that my obligation to submit such preparations for review arises during the course of my access to SCI and thereafter, and I agree to make any required submissions prior to discussing the preparation with, or showing it to, anyone who is not authorized to have access to SCI. I further agree that I will not disclose the contents of such preparation to any person not authorized to have access to SCI until I have received written authorization from the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to SCI that such disclosure is permitted.

5. I understand that the purpose of the review described in paragraph 4 is to give the United States a reasonable opportunity to determine whether the preparation submitted pursuant to paragraph 4 sets forth any SCI. I further understand that the Department or Agency to which I have made a submission will act upon it, coordinating within the Intelligence Community when appropriate, and make a response to me within a reasonable time, not to exceed 30 working days from date of receipt.

6. I have been advised that any breach of this Agreement may result in the termination of my access to SCI and removal from a position of special confidence and trust requiring such access, as well as the termination of my employment or other relationships with any Department or Agency that provides me with access to SCI. In addition, I have been advised that any unauthorized disclosure of SCI by me may constitute violations of United States criminal laws, including the provisions of Sections 793, 794, 798, and 952, Title 18, United States Code, and of Section 783(b), Title 50, United States Code. Nothing in this Agreement constitutes a waiver by the United States of the right to prosecute me for any statutory violation.

7. I understand that the United States Government may seek any remedy available to it to enforce this Agreement including, but not limited to, application for a court order prohibiting disclosure of information in breach of this Agreement. I have been advised that the action can be brought against me in any of the several appropriate United States District Courts where the United States Government may elect to file the action. Court costs and reasonable attorneys fees incurred by the United States Government may be assessed against me if I lose such action.

8. I understand that all information to which I may obtain access by signing this Agreement is now and will remain the property of the United States Government unless and until otherwise determined by an appropriate official or final ruling of a court of law. Subject to such determination, I do not now, nor will I ever, possess any right, interest, title, or claim whatsoever to such information. I agree that I shall return all materials that may have come into my possession or for which I am responsible because of such access, upon demand by an authorized representative of the United States Government or upon the conclusion of my employment or other relationship with the United States Government entity providing me access to such materials. If I do not return such materials upon request, I understand this may be a violation of Section 793, Title 18, United States Code.

9. Unless and until I am released in writing by an authorized representative of the Department or Agency that last provided me with access to SCI, I understand that all conditions and obligations imposed upon me by this Agreement apply during the time I am granted access to SCI, and at all times thereafter.

10. Each provision of this Agreement is severable. If a court should find any provision of this Agreement to be unenforceable, all other provisions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect. This Agreement concerns SCI and does not set forth such other conditions and obligations not related to SCI as may now or hereafter pertain to my employment by or assignment or relationship with the Department or Agency.

11. I have read this Agreement carefully and my questions, if any, have been answered to my satisfaction. I acknowledge that the briefing officer has made available Sections 793, 794, 798, and 952 of Title 18, United States Code, and Section 783(b) of Title 50, United States Code, and Executive Order 12958, as amended, so that I may read them at this time, if I so choose.

12. I hereby assign to the United States Government all rights, title and interest, claims, liabilities, remuneration, and emoluments that have resulted, will result, or may result from any disclosure, publication, or revelation not consistent with the terms of this Agreement.

13. These restrictions are consistent with and do not supersede conflict with or otherwise alter the employee obligations rights or liabilities created by Executive Order 12958; section 7211 of title 5, United States Code (governing disclosures to Congress); section 1034 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by the Military Whistleblower Protection Act (governing disclosure to Congress by members of the Military); section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code, as amended by the Whistleblower Protection Act (governing disclosures of illegality, waste, fraud, abuse or public health or safety threats); the Intelligence Identities Protection Act of 1982 (50 USC 421 et seq.) (governing disclosures that could expose confidential Government agents), and the statutes which protect against disclosure that may compromise the national security, including section 641, 793, 794, 798, and 952 of title 18, United States Code, and section 4(b) of the Subversive Activities Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. section 783(b)). The definitions, requirements, obligations, rights, sanctions and liabilities created by said Executive Order and listed statutes are incorporated into this Agreement and are controlling. (b)(3) CIAAct

14. This Agreement shall be interpreted under and in conformance with the law of the United States. (b)(6)

15. I make this Agreement without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion.

I have been advised that the unauthorized disclosure, unauthorized retention, or negligent handling of SCI by me could cause irreparable injury to the United States or be used to advantage by a foreign nation. I hereby agree that I will never divulge anything marked as SCI or that I know to be SCI to anyone who is not authorized to receive it without prior written authorization from the United States Government department or agency (hereinafter Department or Agency) that last authorized my access to SCI. I understand that it is my responsibility to consult with appropriate management authorities in the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to SCI, whether or not I am still employed by or associated with that Department or Agency or a contractor thereof, in order to ensure that I know whether information or material within my knowledge or control that I have reason to believe might be SCI, or related to or derived from SCI, is considered by such Department or Agency to be SCI. I further understand that I am also obligated by law and regulation not to disclose any classified information or material in an unauthorized fashion.
4. In consideration of being granted access to SCI and of being assigned or retained in a position of special confidence and trust requiring access to SCI, I hereby agree to submit for security review by the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to such information or material, any writing or other preparation in any form, including a work of fiction, that contains or purports to contain any SCI or description of activities that produce or relate to SCI or that I have reason to believe are derived from SCI, that I contemplate disclosing to any person not authorized to have access to SCI or that I have prepared for public disclosure. I understand and agree that my obligation to submit such preparations for review applies during the course of my access to SCI and thereafter, and I agree to make any required submissions prior to discussing the preparation with, or showing it to, anyone who is not authorized to have access to SCI. I further agree that I will not disclose the contents of such preparation to any person not authorized to have access to SCI until I have received written authorization from the Department or Agency that last authorized my access to SCI that such disclosure is permitted.
5. I understand that the purpose of the review described in paragraph 4 is to give the United States a reasonable opportunity to determine whether the preparation submitted pursuant to paragraph 4 sets forth any SCI. I further understand that the Department or Agency to which I have made a submission will act upon it, coordinating within the Intelligence Community when appropriate, and make a response to me within a reasonable time, not to exceed 30 working days from date of receipt.
6. I have been advised that any breach of this Agreement may result in the termination of my access to SCI and removal from a position of special confidence and trust requiring such access, as well as the termination of my employment or other relationships with any Department or Agency that provides me with access to SCI. In addition, I have been advised that any unauthorized disclosure of SCI by me may constitute violations of United States criminal laws, including the provisions of Sections 793, 794, 798, and 952, Title 18, United States Code, and of Section 783(b), Title 50, United States Code. Nothing in this Agreement constitutes a waiver by the United States of the right to prosecute me for any statutory violation.
7. I understand that the United States Government may seek any remedy available to it to enforce this Agreement including, but not limited to, application for a court order prohibiting disclosure of information in breach of this Agreement. I have been advised that the action can be brought against me in any of the several appropriate United States District Courts where the United States Government may elect to file the action. Court costs and reasonable attorneys fees incurred by the United States Government may be assessed against me if I lose such action.
8. I understand that all information to which I may obtain access by signing this Agreement is now and will remain the property of the United States Government unless and until otherwise determined by an appropriate official or final ruling of a court of law. Subject to such determination, I do not now, nor will I ever, possess any right, interest, title, or claim whatsoever to such information. I agree that I shall return all materials that may have come into my possession or for which I am responsible because of such access, upon demand by an authorized representative of the United States Government or upon the conclusion of my employment or other relationship with the United States Government entity providing me access to such materials. If I do not return such materials upon request, I understand this may be a violation of Section 793, Title 18, United States Code.
9. Unless and until I am released in writing by an authorized representative of the Department or Agency that last provided me with access to SCI, I understand that all conditions and obligations imposed upon me by this Agreement apply during the time I am granted access to SCI, and at all times thereafter.
10. Each provision of this Agreement is severable. If a court should find any provision of this Agreement to be unenforceable, all other provisions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect. This Agreement concerns SCI and does not set forth such other conditions and obligations not related to SCI as may now or hereafter pertain to my employment by or assignment or relationship with the Department or Agency.
11. I have read this Agreement carefully and my questions, if any, have been answered to my satisfaction. I acknowledge that the briefing officer has made available Sections 793, 794, 798, and 952 of Title 18, United States Code, and Section 783(b) of Title 50, United States Code, and Executive Order 12958, as amended, so that I may read them at this time, if I so choose.

hereby Approved for Release: 2019/02/28 C06769989 es, remu

SUNDAY TALK SHOW TRANSCRIPTS

NBC - MEET THE PRESS

MR. TIM RUSSERT: Our issues this Sunday: Can the Senate and the House agree on a comprehensive reform of immigration? Was the FBI raid on a congressional office a breach of the constitutional separation of powers? With us: the senior senator from Nebraska, Chuck Hagel; and the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner of Wisconsin.

(Videotape, May 25, 2006):

PRES. GEORGE W. BUSH: Saying, "Bring it on." Kind of tough talk, you know, that sent the wrong signal to people.

(End videotape)

MR. RUSSERT: And the new Iraqi prime minister in an exclusive NBC News interview.

Insights and analysis from David Broder of The Washington Post, David Ignatius of The Washington Post, Kate O'Beirne of the National Review, and Eugene Robinson of The Washington Post.

And in our MEET THE PRESS MINUTE, we remember former Treasury Secretary and U.S. Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who died this week.

But first, immigration. Can the House, the Senate and the White House find common ground? We are joined by Congressman James Sensenbrenner, Senator Chuck Hagel.

SEN. CHUCK HAGEL (R-NE): Hi.

MR. RUSSERT: Welcome both.

Let's put this issue in context for our viewers, and read a summary of the bill that was just passed by the Senate. Here we go. "Border security would get a boost, with 14,000 Border Patrol agents added ... over the next five years. Extra detention facilities would be built to hold the illegal immigrants caught at the border. And the bill authorizes the construction of 370 miles of fencing along the U.S.-Mexico boundary.

"Employers would have to start using an electronic verification system within 18 months to ensure that all new hires are legal. Companies that hired illegal workers would be fined up to $20,000 dollars, and repeat offenders would draw prison terms.

"... The bill creates a three-tiered system to determine the future status of illegal immigrants. Those who arrived in the U.S. in the last two years would be required to leave. Those in the country more than two years but less than five years would have to leave the country and get a work visa before reentering, after which they could work toward legal status.

"Those in the U.S. longer than five years could stay and eventually apply for permanent legal status, a step toward citizenship, as long as they paid back taxes and fines of at least $3,250 dollars, continued working, and learned English and U.S. civics.

"A guest worker program would allow foreign workers to enter the country in the future and provide a way for them to gain permanent legal status.

"The bill also declares English the national language."

Congressman Sensenbrenner, what is wrong with that legislation?

REP. JAMES SENSENBRENNER (R-WI): Well, it's too much too soon and too expensive. What we have to do is first secure the border, and then we have to turn off the magnet that brings more illegal immigrants into our country. Once we do that and we know it's effective, then we can figure out what to do with the 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants that are already here. I'm afraid that the amnesty--and that's what it is--that's proposed in the Senate bill and the way it's proposed is going to result in huge document fraud just like there was when amnesty was passed 20 years ago in the Simpson-Mazzoli Bill, which failed so miserably that we have a problem that's out of control now.

MR. RUSSERT: What would you do with the 11 million illegal immigrants?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Well, if we have a workable and effective employer sanctions program, then I think a lot of the illegal immigrants would simply go back home because they would no longer be able to work in this country illegally. The problem with the Senate bill is that there is no verification of current illegal immigrant status, so they can keep their jobs forever. The House bill does require current employee Social Security numbers to be verified so that we can squeeze the illegal immigrant employment out of our economy and replace illegal immigrant workers with either citizens or legal immigrants who have green cards.

MR. RUSSERT: As you well know, those 11 million illegal immigrants have about three million children who were born in the U.S., therefore they are U.S. citizens. What would happen to them? Would they go back to the or--the country of origin for the mom and pop? Or would they stay in the U.S.?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: The mom and pop would have to make that determination on their own. We cannot deport U.S. citizens, and I would tell you that it's impractical and probably physically impossible to deport the 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants that are already here. What the Senate does is throw up their hands, say, "Give them amnesty"--they don't call it amnesty--but give them amnesty and allow them to stay. That's not fair because it gives a reward to a lawbreaker, but it also is unfair to people who are standing in queue to become legal immigrants. For example, a legal immigrant from Mexico has to wait 16 years. Under the Senate bill, an illegal immigrant who is a Mexican citizen can get the permanent resident status and a green card in only six years. So sneaking under the fence under the Senate bill jumps you ahead in the line by 10 years.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Hagel, you are the author of that said legislation.

Please respond.

SEN. HAGEL: Well, my friend, Jim Sensenbrenner, has not given all the story here as to what that bill does. Let's start with a couple of the main points. Our bill is 730 pages long. The House bill is 255 pages long. The first half of our bill deals solely with enforcement. You put some of them up on the screen. It goes for hundreds of pages beyond that. So we do enforce the border, and we do things in addition to which you said, 500 miles of vehicle traps and so on. There are 60 subsections in our bill on what we would do with enforcement. In fact, our bill goes further than the House bill in some sections on enforcement.

Now, let's get to the bigger issues after enforcement. In the first half of our bill is enforcement. Nobody questions enforcement. Amnesty, that's nonsense. What Ronald Reagan did in 1986 was amnesty, "Unconditional, all is forgiven." What Jimmy Carter did in 1978 with those who left this country rather than serve the country, "unconditional, all is forgiven." That was amnesty. This is not amnesty, as you've already laid out some of the criteria that those who would qualify would have to go through. Not all of the criteria you laid out.

Let's talk about the workers. For example, in the front page of The New York Times this morning, there's a story about firefighters in the Northwestern part of the United States. It talks about half of the National Forest Service firefighters are immigrants, and probably most of those are illegal immigrants. The fact is, temporary workers--and by the way, the secretary of labor signs off on temporary workers. No temporary workers are allowed in this country unless he signs off or she signs off.

We need to deal with that. We need to deal with the 11 million to 12 million and, as you noted, those children. We can't just defer that. This is not a sequential process. This is a process that must be comprehensive. All the pieces that we have in our bill--and yes, they are debatable and they should be debatable. Yes, they're emotional, but they're all part of what we're trying to do in a wider view, wider sense of what is important to our, our country.

Let me talk about a couple of other things here. He talks about money. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Commission on Taxes both said--both came up with the same number, over the next 10 years the Senate bill would cost about $54 billion dollars. But what you don't hear is they also said that the revenues coming in from that Senate bill would be about $66 billion dollars. So, yes, it's going to take some resources, but actually the Congressional Budget Office says that our bill produces more revenues than it does expenses.

You can't just let dangle out there for our country, for our national security, for our economics, for our fabric, our social fabric, those who are here illegally. They have broken a law, they must be dealt with, and we have a way to, to deal with them. Is it imperfect? Yes, it is. But when you asked the chairman the question, "What are you doing, Mr. Chairman?" he really doesn't have an answer for that. "Well, let's just fix the border first." Well, of course you fix the border first. The problem with 1986 in that, in that bill, yes, it was amnesty. This is not amnesty. Second, we didn't enforce our border. Third, we didn't do anything about worker enforcement. We didn't give any penalties or any structure to those who hire, the employers, their verification, those illegals, and we just let the rest of, of it drift. We have an opportunity now to restructure, recommit ourselves and do it right.

MR. RUSSERT: Congressman Sensenbrenner, when the president of the United States addressed the nation on this subject, you said, quote, "I think he doesn't get it." What doesn't President Bush get?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: President Bush and my, with all due respect, my colleagues in the Senate don't get the fact that Simpson-Mazzoli failed miserably 20 years ago. This bill is a repeat of Simpson-Mazzoli. First, let me say that the convoluted thing that Senator Hagel says is not amnesty really is amnesty, and former Attorney General Ed Meese, who was Reagan's AG at the time, wrote an op-ed piece in The New York Times on Wednesday, said that at least Ronald Reagan was honest in calling it amnesty.

Now, what--the procedure that the Senate has done invites document fraud. That happened in '86 when illegal immigrants who were here for two years could apply for amnesty. Meese said that there was a huge amount of document fraud. The same construct is in the Senate bill. But the Senate also has got a provision in their bill that says that the immigration authorities cannot investigate beyond the piece of paper that the immigrant applies for amnesty on. So if the person lies on that application, there can't be an investigation, and the government employee is subject to criminal investigation and liability if they try to investigate it on their own.

The other thing the Senate bill does, and I think this is really outrageous, is that it gives retroactive Social Security credit to illegal immigrants who are using fraudulent Social Security cards. That's going to be an $80 billion to $100 billion-dollar raid on a Social Security trust fund that we all know isn't very healthy. And what this does is that it rewards the illegal immigrants for the period that they were here illegally, work—and working illegally, not just in letting them stay here, but to dip into a Social Security fund that has got to be restructured if it is to continue to provide the benefits to people who have worked here and paid in all of their lives.

MR. RUSSERT: But isn't it estimated that illegal immigrants have contributed over $400 billion dollars into the Social Security fund?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: And, and illegal immigrants can't get Social Security numbers on their own, so either they contributed with a stolen Social Security number or a fraudulent Social Security number. And the fact of the matter remains is that the entire transaction was fraud and the Senate bill retroactively rewards that fraud. That's not right.

MR. RUSSERT: Go ahead, Senator.

SEN. HAGEL: Well, let me, let me correct the chairman on a couple of points. The Senate bill puts into place a biometric identification card. Every alien, every immigrant worker must have a biometric identification card. That means you can't get a job without it. It's tamper-proof, fraud-resistant. And therefore, that starts to deal with some of the things the chairman's talking about. He inconveniently forgets that.

The fact is, on workers, one of the things that we don't talk much about is that we are essentially at full employment in the country today. Our current unemployment rate in this country today is 4.7 percent. That—any economist will tell you that's almost full employment. The fact is, we have more jobs today than ever in the history of this country, all kinds of new jobs. Our bill deals with these, these worker visas, these temporary worker visas, both low skill and high skill.

One of the things that Europe did wrong in this years and years ago—and France is a good example—when they're not dealing with the things the Senate bill's dealing with, what you do is you perpetuate a, a lower class, a constant, a consistent, a permanent lower class. That's part of the problems that the Europeans are having today. Our bill deals with that. You, you cannot perpetuate that lower class. So all of these things are, are part of what we have to deal with.

And I acknowledge, can we do something better in a conference? I hope so. That's the whole point of a conference. But, but to just walk away from it and say, "Well, we're going to enforce budgets—our borders first, and then maybe we'll get to the rest of it," we fail the American public. We fail those who sent us here not to resolve this problem. And I think the president's right. I think the American people are starting to move in that direction, fix the problem. It will be imperfect.

MR. RUSSERT: What will be the political consequences this fall if a Republican president, a Republican Senate and a Republican House do not come together and find common ground on immigration?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, there will be political consequences. There are political consequences for everything we defer and don't do. We're in the mess that we're in today on this issue is because we've deferred this tough issue. My dear friend Jim Sensenbrenner and those who think like Jim on this, they want to continue to defer it. That's why we have the problem we have. There will be a political consequence for this. That's not why we do it or should fix it, but, but make no mistake, politics is wrapped around everything. Politics is in the fabric of our very processes, as it should be, because politics is about accountability, it's about leadership, it's about courage. This is the test. This is a significant test.

MR. RUSSERT: Bottom line, Congressman Sensenbrenner, will you—will House

Republicans accept any path to citizenship for the illegal immigrants now in the U.S.?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Tim, the words "path to citizenship" is a buzz word for amnesty. We ought to be honest. It is amnesty.

But to respond to Senator Hagel, I was in Congress when the Simpson-Mazzoli bill was passed. I voted against it. We have the problem today not because we deferred the problem, it's because Congress made a mistake in passing Simpson-Mazzoli. And those who supported it, including former Senator Simpson, said that the Simpson-Mazzoli bill has given us the difficulty that we're in.

The Senate bill is Simpson-Mazzoli 20 years later. I want to solve the problem. The American people want this problem solved, but this time we've got to do it right. And to do it right means to do things in the proper order. The secret is first, secure the border and enforce the employer sanctions law. If we don't do both of those things, then we will simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border and taking jobs, because it is always cheaper for an illegal immigrant to be hired than either a citizen or a legal immigrant with a green card and work authorization. The market does work, and no bill that we pass, unless it is done right, will be able to rectify the market so that people who are doing these jobs, including Americans and legal immigrants, will be on the books, will be legal, will be paid and will have their Social Security taxes paid under their own Social Security number and their own name. And that's what the priorities of the House are.

I can say that earlier this month Zogby released a poll, and they had a fair question where they asked the American public whether they preferred the Senate or the House approach. The House approach was preferred over the Senate approach by a 64- to 30-percent margin by the American public. I think the House is where the American people are; the Senate has gone way off the page.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me ask my question again: Would you accept any legislation which would put illegal immigrants on a path to citizenship or, as you say, amnesty?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: No. Amnesty is wrong, and even Mexican government officials have said that the talk of amnesty is actually increasing the flow of illegal immigrants across the border as we speak. And they have redeployed some of their security forces into the desert on the Mexican side of the border to prevent Mexicans who are trying to come across the border from either starving or being dehydrated. Amnesty is wrong and we should not pass it.

MR. RUSSERT: Twenty-four percent of the farming industry relies on illegal immigrants; 17 percent of the cleaning industry, 14 percent of the construction industry, 12 percent of the food preparation industry—all illegal immigrants. What happens to those industries if the illegal immigrants are sent home?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: I'm not saying that the illegal immigrants will be sent home, and I think that the end sum game, which I hope Senator Hagel agrees with, is to turn the illegal immigrant work force into a legal work force, whether they're legal immigrants or whether they're United States citizens. Because this problem has festered for such a long period of time, that can't be done with the wave of a wand or the signing of a bill by the president of the United States.

But I get back to the point that unless we do employer sanctions right and do border security right, you'll simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border, and those that are here now might not apply for amnesty or whatever else it's called because they're afraid that they will price themselves out of the market and lose their jobs.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator:

SEN. HAGEL: Jim Sensenbrenner has just described the Senate bill. He has just described why we should pass the Senate bill. Everything he just said, it is right and it is included in the Senate bill. You talk about polls and the American people and where the American people are on this. Isn't it interesting that you have four states that are along that 2,000-mile border with Mexico, four states with eight United States senators. Five of those eight senators, bipartisan, supported the Senate bill.

Now, are they so out of touch with their constituents, five out of eight border state senators supported the Senate bill? I don't think so. I think the American people, as they start to become more aware of what the details are, what the facts are, information, your kinds of programs, Tim, that allow people to understand this, will, as we always do, start to appreciate the fact that you just—you cannot let this continue to drift, that you have to deal with it. And, again, I'm, I'm amused, is the only reaction I can have at Jim and others, they're continuation on amnesty. I mean, this is just not amnesty. But we'll let, we'll let the conference figure this out.

Last point I'd make on this. I don't speak for the Senate, I don't speak for any senator. I've spoken to a number of Jim's colleagues—matter of fact, some leadership colleagues over there. Most of the people, the Republicans on the House side that I've spoken to, including leadership, including the chairman of the Rules committee who is from California, Congressman David Dreier, want to try to find a resolution to this. So what I'm saying is, this is the best opportunity to do that in a conference, and I think we all want that. I know Jim Sensenbrenner wants it. But to, but to say that something's a nonstarter before you go in, you can't do that.

MR. RUSSERT: Would you support legislation, in the final analysis, that did not provide a path for citizenship for the illegal immigrants?

SEN. HAGEL: I think you've got to have some system, Tim, to do this. Now, they could change it, they can tune it up, they can amend it, but you again are deferring the problem. And, as Jim Sensenbrenner said, the failure of the 1986 act was because we didn't deal with that, as well as we didn't deal with other things. We are now dealing with all those pieces in the Senate bill. Doesn't mean it's perfect, doesn't mean it can't be improved. That's why you have the conference.

MR. RUSSERT: Congressman Sensenbrenner, will there be a bill?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: I hope so. I think the American public wants us to have a bill, but it's important to do it right. Twenty years ago we did it wrong, and we're paying the price. I don't think either Senator Hagel or I want our name on a bill that ends up blowing up in the face of the United States 20 years from now like Simpson-Mazzoli did.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to another subject. You issued a press release saying that you're going to have a hearing entitled "Reckless Justice: Did the Saturday Night Raid of Congress Trample the Constitution?" The FBI raiding the office of Congressman William Jefferson, a Democrat, with a court-approved search warrant, in their investigation of potential bribery. Why are you so upset?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: The Constitution has given Congress immunity for certain transactions, but the court has very clearly said that no corrupt member of Congress can hide behind the speech or debate clause of the US Constitution to shield criminal activity. The FBI has been able to convict corrupt congresspeople in the ABSCAM and in the House bank scandal without this kind of a raid. The executive branch has got immunity under executive privilege as well. And I don't think that it would be right for a House committee to issue a subpoena to the president's office and send the Capitol Police rummaging through files, taking everything, and then deciding what wasn't relevant by themselves and returning it to the president. And that's what the Capitol—or what the FBI did in Congressman Jefferson's office two weeks ago.

Separation of powers and checks and balances is very important, but I want to emphasize and reemphasize that this debate is not over whether Congressman Jefferson is guilty of a criminal offense. He cannot use the constitutional immunity of Congress to shield himself from that or any evidence of that. But it is about the ability of the Congress to be able to do its job free of coercion from the executive branch, and this is something that's worked very well for 219 years, and I think if it's done right, it will continue to work very well for the next 219 years.

MR. RUSSERT: When Speaker Hastert spoke out like you have against this raid, he said information was leaked about him and being involved in his own investigation against him in order to intimidate him. What do you know about that?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Well, the Justice Department twice denied that Speaker Hastert is under investigation. One of your competing-competing news channels after that denial by the Justice Department republished the fact that the Justice Department allegedly was investigating Speaker Hastert. There was a second denial. I think that news media people have a justifiable cynicism of those of us who serve in public office, but believe me, after the department denied that the speaker is under investigation, for them to turn around and put it up on the air again kind of makes those of us who are in the cross hairs because we happen to be elected a little cynical of what some people in the news media do. Fortunately, that's not you, Tim.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Hagel, are you upset at the fact that the FBI raided the office of a congressman with a subpoena, court-ordered, because he is the subject of a criminal investigation?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, first, we all need to reaffirm that no individual is above the law. Whether it's a congressman, a senator, certainly a president. But some of the points that Jim Sensenbrenner brings out are important. I don't know the facts here, so I'm a little out of my depth. But what I do know, I think this was handled a little awkwardly. I think the president is right in pulling this back a little bit. He is, as you know, put a freeze on this and they will not make a decision for 45 days. We can work our way through this, but you've got a number of factors involved. Not only the ones that the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee mentioned, but you've got also atmospherics here and, and a very testy relationship that's going beyond just what, what this issue is about. So we need to just work it through.

MR. RUSSERT: You mean Republicans are fed up with the Bush White House?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, there, there are lot of issues here. And I would go back more specifically not to political issues, but NSA for example, using new technologies to monitor and inventory calls. This is, this is the point I'm making. It's a universe of bigger issues than, than just this. And this environment, now, is widened and deepened by this one last issue and, and yes there is.

MR. RUSSERT: Is there anger amongst Congressional Republicans with the White House?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, I think there's an issue of—and there's always a tension usually.

MR. RUSSERT: Frustration?

SEN. HAGEL: There's some frustration. Sure, there is. And I think that you're seeing that played out on both sides.

MR. RUSSERT: You said last week the president should negotiate directly with Iran. Why?

SEN. HAGEL: I said he should engage directly with Iran. I don't see, first of all, how you're going to get to the core, to the central issues on the differences, significant differences, between Iran and the United States without that direct engagement. How are things getting better? Are things getting better at the United Nations? Are we enlisting more support for our cause? Are things getting better in the Middle East? I think you could make a pretty strong case that things are worse off in the Middle East today than they were three years ago, by measurement of Iraq, by Iran, by the Palestinian/Israeli issue, what's going on in Egypt.

And I think the United States must use its force of diplomacy to engage Iran. Eventually you're going to have to do that. It is bigger than just the nuclear issue. We're talking about Israel, Iraq, oil, economy. Iran is a large country. It's a powerful country. It's a country of a 5,000 year history. That's diplomacy, that's the hard work of diplomacy. Eventually, we're going to have to do it, we should do it, we should take the leadership.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Chuck Hagel, Congressman James Sensenbrenner, we thank you both very much for your views.

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Thank you.

SEN. HAGEL: Thank you.

MR. RUSSERT: And we'll be watching this conference committee discussion about immigration.

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Thank you.

MR. RUSSERT: Coming next, our political roundtable. Immigration and the Iraq war, how will they affect the midterm elections November 2006? Our political roundtable is next right here on MEET THE PRESS.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: Our political roundtable—David Broder, David Ignatius, Kate O'Beirne, and the one and the great Mr. Robinson of The Washington Post—after this station break.

MR. RUSSERT: Welcome, all.

David Broder, here's the front page of your paper today. "Republican House members facing the toughest races this fall are overwhelmingly opposed to any deal that provides illegal immigrants a path to citizenship—an election-year dynamic that significantly dims the prospects that President Bush will win the immigration compromise he is seeking ... The opposition spreads across the geographical and ideological boundaries that often divide House Republicans. ... Moderates such as Christopher Shays in suburban Connecticut and Steve Chabot in Cincinnati [and] conservative J.D. Hayworth in Arizona said they are adamant that Congress not take any action that might be perceived as rewarding illegal behavior." Where are we?

MR. DAVID BRODER: The House is convinced—the Republicans in the House are convinced that the public is with them, as you heard Mr. Sensenbrenner say. I think it's going to be a very difficult negotiation, and I think, for many of those Republicans, they'd rather have no bill than a bill that they can't justify to their constituents.

MR. RUSSERT: Kate O'Beirne, the speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert, has said, "I will not put forward any legislation that does not have the support of the majority of the Republicans." Even if he has every Democrat and 49 percent of the Republicans, a majority in the House, he won't move the legislation. Is that right?

MS. KATE O'BEIRNE: Right. That, that's been a long-standing pledge of his, not too much unlike the Democrats who were running Congress before the Republicans took over. Let's not forget, most of the items on the Contract with America were items that Republicans in the House couldn't get a vote on on the floor. So it, it is a difference between the House and Senate.

Senator Frist, of course, didn't get a majority of his Republicans for the bill the Senate just passed out. He had no alternative, because his option was no bill, because he needs 60 votes to get something out of the Senate. But a majority of the Senate Republicans wind-wound up seeming to agree with the majority of the House Republicans, so it sort of puts George Bush with congressional Democrats on the issue of immigration.

MR. RUSSERT: Gene Robinson, how about this? You see George Bush closer to John McCain and Ted Kennedy than he is to House Republicans. What happens politically if a Republican president, Republican House, Republican Senate cannot agree on an immigration bill?

MR. EUGENE ROBINSON: Well, I think politically it's damaging. It makes it--this whole issue has been raised, it's, it's topic A. If they get nothing done on it, I think it's harmful to the Republican Party. It may be a good thing for the country if they don't get anything done, because the House approach, I think, really ignores the fact that there are 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants here who can't be rounded up and deported overnight, or, or whatever. The president's bill, and the president's approach and the Senate approach--very complicated, hard to sell--might make more sense as public policy, I think, but harder to sell.

MR. RUSSERT: David:

MR. DAVID IGNATIUS: Well, you know, I--listening to the debate between, between, between Sensenbrenner and Hagel, I, I kept thinking this is a wedge issue for Republicans. And Republicans are really angry at each other. And, you know, I think this may be a moment where, if they're unable to come to a compromise on final legislation--you'd certainly have to say that after, after watching this debate and hearing what's going on, that may be a good thing, that the country really isn't quite yet at the point where there is a clear path that everybody will feel comfortable about going forward that will legalize this very difficult problem of immigration. We're just not there yet.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Well...

MR. RUSSERT: Go ahead.

MS. O'BEIRNE: What the House is going to argue, I think, is--what they are arguing is we wouldn't have the 11 million to 12 million illegals here had we not done what we did in 1986, which was, of course, legalize three million illegals and promise to enforce the border and interior enforcement, and not do so. So I think what the House is going to be arguing is for an incremental approach. We do know 80 percent of the public wants the border enforced, they want to stop the hundreds of thousands coming over, and they support workplace sanctions. They think you shouldn't be able to hire illegals. So they're with the public on the enforcement side, and they'll talk incremental.

Once we have that in place, then we can adopt--and I think there's more support among House Republicans than people think for a guest worker program. They are hearing from employers back home. But they want to make sure that it's going to be orderly, not make the mistakes in '86, and it would be unworkable if we don't get the enforcement and workplace stuff right.

MR. IGNATIUS: You know, Sensenbrenner talked about turning off the magnet that's drawing illegal immigrants. I'm sorry, the magnet is the U.S. economy.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Right.

MR. IGNATIUS: And you can't turn that off.

MR. ROBINSON: And the border is not easily sealed.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Right.

MR. ROBINSON: It is not easily sealed. Go down there, you'll see.

MR. RUSSERT: David Broder, the president of the United States, 35 percent approval rating, has talked about this issue, immigration, passionately for a long time. What does he now do if he moves forward on the path to citizenship-or amnesty, as Congressman Sensenbrenner referred to it? Does he further antagonize his political base and risk going down in the polls, or will a success on the issue help him with moderate or swing voters?

MR. BRODER: Well, a success would certainly help him. He has not had a win in Congress for much too long politically. So he's better off if he can get a bill. But there's no question that he's going to pay a price for challenging the core of the Republican Party on, on this issue.

I have to say, I think the president is committed. I think his gut and his heart is in this issue, and he is prepared, I think, to fight on this issue.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to the issue of the FBI raid on the office of Congressman William and-Jefferson, denounced in an interesting bipartisan letter by Dennis Hastert and Nancy Pelosi, the first I've seen in a long time.

Kate O'Beirne, your National Review editorial this week is quite strong on this subject. Let me read it. "House Speaker Dennis Hastert, Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, and Majority Leader John Boehner led a chorus of disgruntled legislators in crying foul, closing ranks around an apparent felon and raving incoherently about a supposed separation-of-powers violation.

"This incredibly tin-eared performance was based on an extravagant construction of the Constitution's speech-and-debate clause (Article 1, Section 6). Congress evidently reads this clause as giving its office space blanket immunity from any investigation by the executive branch - even with court authorization - in connection with any crime, no matter how heinous.

"This is delusional. Congress had a chance to come out swinging against corruption - to demonstrate, amid a slew of tawdry scandals, its recognition that public officials are subject to the same laws as ordinary citizens. The Republican leadership in particular should have seen an opportunity to redirect attention from its caucus's lapses to a Democrat's crude criminality. They chose, instead, to rally around an apparent swindler." Wow.

MS. O'BEIRNE: The, the broad constitutional claim I think is awfully shaky. In fact, as you watch this during the course of this week, it's not a claim that the congressional leaders are making. They do allow that no member should be able to hide in secret in his office, away from law enforcement officials, evidence of criminal behavior.

But just because the Justice Department has a legal right under a, under a legal search warrant, doesn't mean they should either do it or that they did it in the right way. There actually are legitimate separation of powers arguments, I think. And, in fact, the legislative branch is susceptible to being intimidated by the executive branch. The members had no interest in appearing to be defending an accused felon in their midst. They knew the public relations was terrible on the objections they raised, but they felt so strongly about the principle of it. And members who are uneasy about the public relations of seeming to be protecting an accused felon in their midst really reacted so negatively to a leak from the Justice Department against Speaker Hastert a couple of days later, falsely claiming that he was the target of an investigation, part of the Abramoff scandal, that they really rallied to the speaker on those grounds. And it was reminded to them that the same people capable of leaking in retaliation are rummaging through congressional offices.

MR. RUSSERT: How much anger, frustration is there amongst House, Senate Republicans with the Bush White house?

MS. O'BEIRNE: There's a backdrop of frustration. So some saw this as maybe the latest example of showing a lack of regard for legislative prerogatives. I mean, it is an administration that has jealously guarded its own prerogatives, it's own executive privileges. You think they would have been more sensitive to a co-equal branch's view of its prerogatives.

MR. RUSSERT: Gene Robinson, I can hear people, watch people all across the country saying, "You know, the guy is under investigation for taking money. Why not go into his office?"

MR. ROBINSON: Well, you know, the Justice Department seems to feel equally strongly about that what they did was right. The question I had initially was, if you got the money in Bill Jefferson's freezer and you got the alleged bribe on videotape, why do you need to go into his office?

MS. O'BEIRNE: What do you need?

MR. ROBINSON: What do you need? Well, you know, it turns out that there are other instances, there are other possible crimes they want to look into. But also, remember the Abramoff investigation is ongoing. It seems to me that, in a sense, the Justice Department was kind of putting down a marker and saying, you know, "We're going to be looking at a number of people up here, and we're going to go in when we need to go in, and you can't just hide stuff in the corner in your office and expect that, that it will never come to light."

MR. BRODER: I talked to a former member of Congress, a very good lawyer, last night because I was confused by this, by this issue. He said he thinks that the law is probably on the side of the Justice Department, but that it's not a very clearly defined area of law. And he said institutionally he's glad that the Congress is challenging it because this may get it to the Supreme Court and get a definitive ruling about under what circumstances and under what limits can an executive branch agency go in to the congressional office, because there truly is an important principle of the separation of powers that's at stake here.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to the president. Back in April of '04, David Ignatius, he was asked about his biggest mistake, and he said that he really couldn't respond at that moment, he couldn't think of one, and, and he wishes he had more time to prepare for that kind of question. Then, this week he was asked about his biggest mistake with, with Iraq, and without hesitancy, he said, "I shouldn't have said 'Bring it on.' I shouldn't have said, 'We're going to get them, alive or dead,' and the Abu Ghraib prison scandal was a huge problem." Are we seeing a president who's been chastened by Iraq, more introspective about Iraq? What?

MR. IGNATIUS: Well, I thought there was some of both. It was, it was, it was telling, two years on that the president looks back and he's willing to talk, finally, about, about mistakes. In this case, they were mistakes of language. You can say, you know, Abu Ghraib was a mistake, but, frankly, you know, the administration's response still has not been a vigorous one in terms of holding people account for what happened at, at Abu Ghraib. It's been the, been the military.

You know, I, I thought that, that Tony Blair's response to that question was much more substantive. Tony Blair said the problem was that our deBathification effort was too aggressive, that we, that we toppled the basic foundations of this society and we created a vacuum and we haven't known how to, how to, how to fill it.

But, you know, listening to this discussion of past mistakes, it was a reminder that the past and what you know about it really is not a guide to the future. I mean, the dilemmas going forward in Iraq are as painful today as they, as they were two years ago. Looking at those two men, I thought Tony, Tony Blair looked, looked battered, the British prime minister, Bush less so, but you realized the weight of the decisions they still face.

MR. RUSSERT: Kate O'Beirne, we still have a situation of 135,000 American men and women on the ground. Will the president be forced to acknowledge more misjudgments about WMD, about troop levels, about insurrection in order to maintain public support for the war amongst Democrats, conservatives, liberals, Republicans, mainliners, moderates, whatever you want to call them?

MS. O'BEIRNE: I think there's a recognition at the White House, Tim, that being candid about mistakes in the past appears to be more realistic. People maybe are more open to listening to your assessment of how things are going now if they, if they see that sort of sense of being realistic.

I thought it was notable during the press conference with Tony Blair that, rather than talk about all the possibilities with this new government or how many Iraqi forces are now standing up, Tony Blair was emphasizing the course of not winning in Iraq. And I, I think that the public is more open to hearing that than updates on progress on the ground when they don't see a concrete progress-meaning, it seems to me, withdrawing troops, or at least a scheduled withdrawal of troops, capturing Zargawi. In the absence of that kind of concrete evidence, I don't think the public is open to assessments week by week that they have no way of judging. I think there's just more candor involved when, in lieu of that, you're admitting past mistakes and reminding people of the course of failure and how resolute the enemy is. And I thought Tony Blair and the president both made clear we've got to be equally resolute. I think the public's more receptive to that.

MR. RUSSERT: Eugene:

MR. ROBINSON: You know, the, the difference in tone is really amazing when, when you go from "Mission accomplished" and "Bring it on" to, to the way the president sounds now. And if you put this together with, with other things he said recently, it all seems to be an acknowledgment that, you know, not only is Iraq not the, the Athenian democracy it was supposed to be, but, in fact, this is going to be a messy situation for a long time beyond his term in office. There's no easy resolution, there's no easy answer. And there's a—he seems to be looking ahead, you know, toward the verdict of history.

MR. RUSSERT: Enter Iran. The new Prime Minister Maliki sat down with Richard Engel this week, of NBC News, and said, "Iraq will not be used as a base for any military operations against Iran." That is not what we're here for.

David Ignatius, you wrote an interesting column where you said, and I'll read it, "Amid all the debate about intelligence, there has been surprisingly little focus on the question the average citizen (and average policymaker, too) would probably have at the top of the list: Will these guys get it wrong again? Will they tell the world that something is a 'slam-dunk,' only to discover later that it didn't exist? ...

"So how can [Director of National Intelligence John] Negroponte ... be sure the analysts are getting it right this time on Iran? How can they remake the analysts' world so that their human judgment is again 'the intelligence device supreme,' in the words of their patron saint, Sherman Kent, who headed CIA analysis during the Cold War?" Big challenge. Will the world, will the country listen to an American president saying, "Iran is dangerous. We must do something"?

MR. IGNATIUS: Well, that's obviously the biggest nightmare that anyone in the intelligence community could have, that the country will so fundamentally have lost trust in their judgments that when they warn of, of a real crisis, they won't be believed. We have a new CIA director, Michael Hayden, who was confirmed this week, who's going after the agency with a mission of restoring morale, of trying to do analysis in a different way, much more careful look at sourcing, much more transparency so that analysts know who these sources, who typically have been hidden from their view, are. Much more competition and really argument about, about hypotheses for what's going on. So they're going at Iran in a, in a different way.

On the Maliki comments about Iran, where he says, "We will not allow Iraq to be used as a base for attacks on Iran," you know, obviously that, that would worry Americans who'd hoped that Iraq would be an aircraft carrier for us in the Middle East. But, you know, this is an assertion of Iraqi sovereignty and independence, and that should not frighten Americans. Quite the opposite, that's actually good news.

MR. RUSSERT: We have 20 seconds, David. Senator Hagel calling on the president to negotiate directly with the Iranians.

MR. BRODER: I think that's questionable, because we have committed to the Europeans that we would work with them. For us to go off on our own now would leave them in a-wondering can the Americans keep their own commitments to us?

MR. RUSSERT: To be continued. David Broder, David Ignatius, Gene Robinson, Kate O'Beirne, thanks very much.

Coming next, our MEET THE PRESS MINUTE with former vice presidential candidate, treasury secretary and U.S. senator from Texas, the late Lloyd Bentsen.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: And we are back. Former U.S. senator of Texas, Democratic vice presidential candidate, and Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen died this week at the age of 85. During his long career, he appeared on MEET THE PRESS 18 times. This 1994 appearance with NRA chief Wayne LaPierre stands out for what Mr. Bentsen brought to the MEET THE PRESS table. Let's watch.

(Videotape, May 1, 1994):

MR. RUSSERT: We're back with the secretary of the treasury, Lloyd Bentsen.

Mr. Secretary, you heard Mr. LaPierre's challenge. Will you go to the range on Wednesday and experiment with his guns?

SEC'Y LLOYD BENTSEN: I tell you, that's funny, because I went to the range this last week and fired some of those guns. Let me give you an example. When I heard him say that these were not used in crime, that's a street sweeper, 156 instances in the last three years this gun involved in crime.

And I was amused to hear that I'm not supposed to know anything about the guns. I've had guns all my life. I qualified as an expert on the range in the military. I went to the front lines and fired guns in World War II. I fired .50-calibers. In addition to that, I flew 35 missions over Europe. I'm also a quail hunter. Can you imagine that thing being used in...

MR. RUSSERT: Is that Dan Quayle?

SEC'Y BENTSEN: No, no, no.

(End videotape)

MR. RUSSERT: That reference, of course, to what The Washington Post called "the perfect put-down." Mr. Bentsen's famous exchange with Dan Quayle during the vice presidential debate, October 5, 1988.

(Videotape, October 5, 1988):

SEN. DAN QUAYLE: I have as much experience in the Congress as Jack Kennedy did when he sought the presidency. I will be prepared to deal with the people in the Bush administration if that unfortunate event would ever occur.

MODERATOR: Senator Bentsen:

SEN. LLOYD BENTSEN: Senator, I served with Jack Kennedy, I knew Jack Kennedy.

Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine. Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy.

MR. RUSSERT: Lloyd Bentsen will be laid to rest this Tuesday in Houston, Texas. He and his family are in our thoughts and prayers.

And we'll be right back.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: Every American president since John F. Kennedy has been a guest on this program during his political career. Now, you can watch complete episodes of some of the most historic MEET THE PRESS presidential appearances: John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. "Meet the Presidents," and other NBC News programming now available on iTunes. For more information and a preview of what's available, check out our Web site mtp.msnbc.com.

That's all for today. We'll be back next week. If it's Sunday, it's MEET THE PRESS.

And this weekend we honor all those brave young men and women in Afghanistan, Iraq and around the world, and we remember all those in our nation's history who've paid the ultimate sacrifice so we all could be free.

ABC - THIS WEEK

STEPHANOPOULOS: This week -- President Bush admits mistakes in Iraq.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: I think the biggest mistake that's happened so far is Abu Ghraib.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: But is another Abu Ghraib about to explode, as Pentagon investigators are convinced that Marines murdered Iraqi civilians?

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

WARNER: There are established facts that incidents of a very serious nature did take place.

MURTHA: There's no question in my mind, they overreacted. There was no combat. They went into houses and killed people.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: What really happened at Haditha? Was there a cover-up? And how will Iraq and the Muslim world react to the news? We'll ask our headliners, Congressman John Murtha, and the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner.

Then, as the Senate passes immigration reform, an FBI raid on House member William Jefferson sets off a constitutional clash between Congress and the White House.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. REP. DENNIS HASTERT (R-IL), SPEAKER: We're going to protect the (inaudible) of the House as far as the Constitution.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: We'll debate that and the rest of the week's politics on our roundtable, with George Will, Martha Raddatz, E.J. Dionne of The Washington Post and former Congressman John Kasich of FOX News.

Plus -- Tony Orlando.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ORLANDO: They said, you know, you're going to be singing this song to welcome home troops for the rest of your career.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And as always, The Sunday Funnies.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) DAVID LETTERMAN, TALK SHOW HOST: And kind of a minor heat wave. As a matter of fact, down in Washington, D.C. earlier today, it was so hot, so hot in Washington, that one congressman actually got into the freezer with his bribe money.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: Good morning, everyone. We begin with that investigation into possible war crimes by U.S. Marines in Iraq. Two separate military panels are poised to conclude that on November 19th, 2005, after a roadside bomb hit a convoy of Marines in the town of Haditha, killing Lance Corporal Miguel Terrazas, several Marines went on a rampage, killing 24 Iraqis, all but one unarmed, including children and the women trying to protect them.

Investigators are also compiling evidence of a cover-up, and Pentagon officials tell ABC News that at least seven Marines could face criminal charges, ranging from dereliction of duty to murder.

Key members of the House and Senate have been briefed on the investigation, including our headliners, Senator John Warner and Congressman John Murtha, who's our first guest. Welcome back, sir.

MURTHA: Nice, George, you've come a long ways.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Thank you, sir. You've been briefed several times on this incident on November 19th, and you've said that the evidence shows the Marines killed innocent civilians in cold blood. From what you know, what happened?

MURTHA: Well, there's no question in my mind. What happened, it was an IED went off.

And you have got to put this in perspective. Every day they go out, an IED goes off. I sanitize when I say IED; I'm talking about explosive device goes off. It doesn't hurt somebody one day; the next day it kills somebody; the next day it maims somebody. And I see those people in the hospital all the time. So the pressure builds every time they go out.

So this particular case, an IED exploded. It killed one Marine. And then a taxi drives up. When the taxi comes up, there's four or five people in it. And they shoot those four or five people, unarmed. And then, they go on a rampage throughout the houses and kill people.

One woman, as I understand it, in talking to the officials in the Marine Corps, was bending over a child, pleading for mercy, and they shot her in cold blood.

That's the thing that's so disturbing. And even more disturbing is the fact that we know the Iraqis knew about it, because they made payments to the Iraqis for accidental deaths or for salacious deaths, whatever you want to call it. And then in addition to that, there has to have been a cover-up of this thing. And...

STEPHANOPOULOS: You believe there was a cover-up? MURTHA: Oh, no question about it. First of all, they tried to say is the IED is what killed these people. The next day, there was a team out there investigating as they always do. And then, nothing happened. Nobody hears about it. They don't tell anybody. Until March, when Time magazine broke the news, nobody realized or recognized what happened.

These kind of things have to be brought out immediately, because the Marines, if they did get away with it, then other Marines would say, well, I'll do the same thing. As a matter of fact, we have another incident, which is very similar to this, George. An incident where a Marine -- or some Marines pulled somebody out of a house, put them next to an IED thing, fired some AKA's so they'd have cartridges there, and then tried to cover that up.

STEPHANOPOULOS: April 26th in Hamandiyah, and several Marines have been put into custody for that as well.

Let me stay on Haditha for a second. We've read that there's evidence, photographic evidence of what happened. Is that true?

MURTHA: Yes, that's exactly true. And it's a combination of the people who did the investigation, and Iraqis took the evidence itself. There's no question about what happened.

And the problem is, who covered up? And why did they cover it up? Why did they wait so long? It's been six months since this happened. It's very simple. They went out the next day, they knew there was something wrong. Two or three days later, they decided that these people were murdered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So who do you blame for the cover-up?

MURTHA: Well, that's what we're trying to figure out. We don't know how far it goes. I mean, it goes right up the chain of command, right up to General Pace. When did he know about it? Did he order the cover-up? Who ordered the cover-up? I'm sure he didn't, but what -- who said, we're not going to publicize this thing? We're not even going to investigate it? Until March, there was no serious investigation. There was an investigation right afterwards, but then it was stifled.

So, we need to know what happened.

And the point is that the pressure, the tremendous pressure on these guys, every day, when they go out with an explosive device. Second is, the Marines knew about it. And so, this gets around the Marine community, as I'd heard rumors about this. Then third is, the Iraqis all knew about it. You can bet.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Three commanders have been relieved of their duty. Is that connected to this?

MURTHA: Well, they tell me it's not connected. They tell me this is dereliction of duty. But we cannot allow something like this to fester. We can't allow it to happen. They've got to put the blame where it goes. And they've got to get this over with.

We've got to make sure -- we're celebrating Memorial Day. And Memorial Day, the freedom and democracy of this great country, and the people that fight for it. And we memorialize the people that have died, and the ones that have fought for the country and the family. And here we are with something like this, which we've got to make sure the world knows this is not something that our troops do. We can't allow something like this.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And are you absolutely sure, though, that this wasn't something that happened in the fog of war? There was confusion, that they thought there was fire coming from the houses, and they thought they were responding to enemy fire from insurgents?

MURTHA: The reports that I have, from the highest level, no firing at all. No interaction. No military action at all in this particular incident. It was an explosive device, which killed a Marine. From then on, it was purely shooting people inside the houses and in a taxi.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Time magazine reports this morning, and they also have a photo that shows a Marine with -- it was taken by a Marine with a cell phone, showing Iraqis kneeling before they were shot. Is that true?

MURTHA: Well, I hear that one of them was, he was, in English, asking for mercy. And so I haven't heard that. I saw that in Time magazine, sitting on your table out there. It was the first I knew about that.

But I've heard rumors like that the whole time. The point is, the Marines knew about it all this time. Somebody in the chain of command decided not to allow this to happen. How far up it went, I don't know.

But the worst thing is, the Iraqis all knew about it. And then, they made payments to the families, which -- and that doesn't happen at the lowest level. That happens at the highest level, before they make a decision to make payments to the families.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You know, a Marine who was accused last year of committing war crimes, Lt. Ilario Pantano, he's written a letter to The Washington Post this morning, saying you're rushing to judgment. And saying that, as he wrote in the Post, Members of the U.S. military serving in Iraq need more than Mr. Murtha's pseudo-sympathy. Let the courts decide if these Marines are guilty. They haven't even been charged with a crime yet, so it is premature to presume their guilt unless that presumption is tied to a political motive.

MURTHA: George, I can understand anybody that's been over there, I can understand anybody that feels that you're denigrating the troops. What I'm saying is, there's nobody done more for the troops than I have. Nobody's worked harder than I have in trying to make sure the troops have what they need.

But I will not excuse murder. And this is what happened. There's no question in my mind about it. This investigation should have been over two or three weeks afterwards, and it should have been made public, and people should have been held responsible for it.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The commandant of the Marine Corps, Michael Hagee, has been in Iraq for the last several days talking to the troops. Not about this incident, he says, but reminding them of their duties under the laws of war. Do you believe the Marine Corps is doing what it takes to fix whatever happened here?

MURTHA: Yeah. And you've got to remember here that General Hagee's not in the chain of command in this particular incident, because this goes through the chain of command up to General Casey, to General Abizaid and then to General Pace. So, technically, he's in the chain of command when it comes to punishment, but otherwise --now, he's acting very quickly now, going out and telling the troops we cannot do something like this.

It erodes -- this is the kind of war you have to win the hearts and minds of the people. We can't win this militarily. It's now got to be a political victory. And we're set back every time something like this happens. This is worse than Abu Ghraib.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, we've already read that al Qaida in Iraq is sending videotapes to mosques in Jordan, in Saudi Arabia, Syria, trying to recruit new insurgents to Iraq. How worried are you --how much damage do you believe this is going to do to the U.S. relations with the Muslim world? And will it become a recruiting tool for terrorists?

MURTHA: George, we've already lost the direction in this war. We've diverted ourselves from the real war against terrorism, into Iraq. We made a mistake by going to Iraq. I've said this over and over again.

And we can't win it militarily. This is the problem we have. Now, the political successes that we talk about are rhetorical successes, almost. Sure. We've got a government formed now. But the two biggest ministries aren't completed, interior and defense.

So when you look at this whole thing, you say to yourself, what progress has been made? All the type things I measure -- sewage all over the streets. Water, only one hour a day they get water. They have to turn water on in the middle of the night. Electricity below prewar level. Oil production below prewar level -- that's how I measure success.

And only the Iraqis can handle this.

This is the thing I've been saying. Our American troops are caught in a civil war. I understand what happened. I don't excuse what happened, but I understand what happened.

STEPHANOPOULOS: More than a million U.S. servicepeople have served in Iraq honorably. Are you convinced that this is an isolated incident?

MURTHA: Well, I hope it's an isolated incident. I would expect that we'll find out there are few incidents like this.

But when you get pressure that they're under every day, when they go out and there's an explosion and it doesn't kill somebody, the explosion then kills somebody, an explosion blows somebody apart. And I see the results of those explosions in the hospital when I go out there almost every week.

You begin to recognize that the pressure could cause it. But we have so few people. Less than one percent of the people in the United States are involved in this war. So they go back over and over again.

Some have been back four and five times. I got a letter from a 10-year-old child. And the child says to me, I appreciate the support of the troops. Don't let my dad be deployed for the fourth time.

And another one was sitting beside her son who's been in the hospital for over a year, hit by an IED. His brain's shaken. He's been in a coma. He can only move his eyeballs.

This is the type thing that I see that we don't need to put up with. The Iraqis can only settle this themselves. They don't want our advice. Sistani didn't even open a letter to the president.

So on Memorial Day, we want to be confident that most of our soldiers would not do something like this. It's an isolated incident. But that's why it's so important to get it out in the open and get the punishment at the appropriate places.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Congressman Murtha, we have to end it there. Thank you very much.

MURTHA: Nice talking to you, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner, is next. And later, Tony Orlando on his ties to veterans.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ORLANDO: The yellow ribbon is a symbol of hope, love and hope. It means, I'm coming home; I've done my time.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

STEPHANOPOULOS: And we are joined now by the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner. Welcome back to This Week, sir.

WARNER: Thank you, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You heard Congressman Murtha just a moment ago. He is convinced, based on his briefings, that war crimes were committed here. Are you?

WARNER: George, at this time, particularly on Memorial Day, when our hearts and minds go out to the families of generations, not just the Afghan/Iraq generation but all the way back to World War II, I think we should be calm and reassuring to the American people that the men and women of our armed forces are admirably and professionally conducting their heavy responsibilities and taking risks throughout the world.

So a sense of calmness, I think, should be brought over this tragic situation that's developing in Iraq with regard to Marines.

I respect my friend, John Murtha. I also was privileged to wear the Marine uniform. And those of us who have had that opportunity are really heartfelt about this situation today.

But we've got to let the uniform code of military justice, the investigation system, proceed before we reach any conclusions on this matter.

I was briefed by the commandant. He came in to see me, and left that afternoon to go over to Iraq, to address his beloved Marines and tell them that the traditions of the corps, going way back to 1776, have not changed. And we're there to protect freedom, but do it in a way where we have respect.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you have said that based on what you heard, you believe that something serious did occur here on November 19th?

WARNER: Yes. I've drawn many years of experience in the Senate and in the Pentagon as secretary of the Navy. This is very serious, but the military are looking at it equally serious.

There is this serious question, however, of what happened and when it happened and what was the immediate reaction of the senior officers in the Marine Corps when they began to gain knowledge of it. I mean, senior by the captains, the majors, lieutenant colonels and on up the chain.

So much of these facts have come through disclosures by the civilian population, the Iraqis. It seems to me it was incumbent upon the military as soon as this situation happened to go back and inspect the sites, as they do, as a matter over routine, when there's deaths like this. Take pictures, which are done solely for the purpose of establishing forensic evidence, and so forth, and come forward with it as quickly as they could.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So do you think they did come forward quickly enough? Congressman Murtha clearly thinks they did not.

WARNER: Well, there is a question. And I'm not going to pronounce judgment. But that is seriously a question that is going to be examined.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The investigation didn't begin until after Time magazine, I believe in February, went to the military with this documentary evidence.

WARNER: That's right. But all I can assure the American public this morning, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I'll do exactly what we did with Abu Ghraib. Those people were before our committee, promptly, raising their right hand, under oath, giving the explanation in full.

STEPHANOPOULOS: When will you do that?

WARNER: As soon as I cannot interfere with the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as it begins to protect the rights of all those involved.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You mentioned Abu Ghraib. And I was talking to Congressman Murtha about this, as well. Some of the observes have said this is going to be even more serious matter, an even more serious matter for the United States in the Muslim world, because people were killed here. And it could explode throughout the Muslim world.

What can the United States do now to blunt that impact?

WARNER: Exactly what they're doing. Doing a complete investigation. And I think it wasn't pointed out earlier, that not only are the Marine Corps investigating, but Centcom, Admiral (sic) Abizaid, has determined that the Army should give also a totally unbiased analysis of the particularly the chain of command reaction.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So you believe the military here has learned the lessons of Abu Ghraib, about at least how to investigate and bring forward the information here?

WARNER: I do, indeed.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And do you believe the president has?

WARNER: I think the president as commander in chief has got to be very cautious, as have I, because we do not wish to influence this situation, such that there's any prejudice to those involved under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

STEPHANOPOULOS: We've also learned about this other incident, that occurred in Hamandiyah, Iraq...

WARNER: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: ... that Congressman Murtha mentioned, on April 26th. What else are you learning about these kinds of incidents? Are we getting everything, I mean all of the allegations coming out right now? Or are you concerned that we're going to find out in coming days and weeks that there's actually far more incidents like this?

WARNER: George, we shouldn't speculate. And that's one of the reasons when I talked to the commandant. He's going to look into that. As to whether or not there's an overall sort of command failure of reminding Marines and soldiers every day of their oath of office, their commitment and what they were taught in training as to how to use force and when not to use force.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Here's what one Navy corpsman at Camp Pendleton said -- told the L.A. Times. He said: The Geneva Convention doesn't really exist over there. We're dealing with terrorists, not an army. That was Navy Corpsman Ken Pearson (ph) of Milwaukee. Do you think that's a wide-spread feeling among the military?

WARNER: Well, there's been some confusion in the past as to exactly how we should treat people who are not connected with any state, that is some government, who are acting on their own initiative. And clearly not within the confines of a governmental type of aggression.

These are terrorists. They're disparate people coming from many lands over there and using their bodies and their bombs to kill others.

We are now in the final stages of preparing what we call the Army manual, which lays out for the men and women of the armed forces and for all to understand exactly what our military can and cannot do in terms of the interrogation and other applications.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Let me change topics, now, to Iran.

There's been a debate going on inside the administration and inside the Congress about whether the president should begin to engage in direct talks with the Iranians.

Do you believe he should?

WARNER: Well, I've said, and I'll repeat it here today, is that I think the option for what we call unilateral or bilateral, between the United States and Iran, should remain on the table.

As a matter of fact, there was some suggestion that the president had advised ambassador Khalilzad, when he thought, Khalilzad thought, it was opportune, he could do so.

So I simply say the administration should leave that option on the table. Do not take it off.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But should they invite the Iranians to talk?

WARNER: Well, that's the finery of diplomacy. We've got to entrust the secretary of state and the president to decide when and if to use that option.

But I also encourage NATO to step up and take a look at this situation. Here we have the Security Council working it. We have the United States, Great Britain and France, working on this issue, countries in the E.U.

It's time for NATO to come to the roundtable because there's definitely a looming threat. Iran already has missiles that can reach Europe. And if they now are proceeding to develop a nuclear weapon, that's a direct threat...

STEPHANOPOULOS: When you say NATO come to the table, do you want them to deploy troops around Iran?

WARNER: No, look. Start just a planning phase. If the 26 nations of NATO were to announce, we're going to look at how we, NATO, drawing on the lessons of the Cold War, where the deterrence doctrine prevented a shot being fired, really, in anger, and that Cold War came to an end -- apply it to this situation.

And we will sit at the table with the IAEA, the U.N. Security Council and so forth and work this thing through. STEPHANOPOULOS: Before you go, I have to show our viewers a little piece of history. This week, you cast your 10,000th vote in the Senate, becoming only the 26th senator in all of U.S. history to do that. Congratulations, sir.

WARNER: Well, thank you. I'm very grateful to the good Lord and my family and my colleagues in the Senate. It's an enormously marvelous privilege, I accept very humbly, to serve in the Senate and continue to do so, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, come back to This Week.

WARNER: Thank you.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Mr. Chairman, thanks very much.

The roundtable is next, with George Will, Martha Raddatz, E.J. Dionne, and John Kasich.

And later, the Sunday funnies.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JAY LENO, HOST, THE TONIGHT SHOW: Hey, Mexican president Vicente Fox arrived in the U.S. today. So it's official. He's the last one. Turn out the lights; they're all here now.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

(ROUNDTABLE)

STEPHANOPOULOS: Our voice this week, Tony Orlando.

During the last days of the Vietnam War, his song, Yellow Ribbon, became a pop anthem.

(MUSIC)

Orlando's been devoted to America's veterans ever since. And on this Memorial Day, he's releasing a new book called Tie a Yellow Ribbon, and donating proceeds to U.S. Vets, a group dedicated to finding homes for those who have served.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

ORLANDO: Yellow Ribbon was not a song that was ever written to make a political statement. It was truly a love song.

I had no idea that it would have a significance to the American people or become part of tapestry of American folklore.

My first experience with it was when he sang it live for the first time at the Cotton Bowl, with Bob Hope to welcome home our prisoners of war from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. And on all Bob Hope shows, the list of stars was long as his arm, and I got -- and I asked, Mr. Hope, why did you pick us? And he said, oh, I heard your record on the radio, and that opening line, I'm coming home, I've done my time, Tony, is every mother's wish and (inaudible), and every soldier's dream come true.

And he said, you know, you're going to be singing this song to welcome home troops for the rest of your career.

OK, from the heart, to the back, sing it!

I can use The Yellow Ribbon as a source to simply raise a dollar or to help a veteran or a find a van for a disabled veteran in some small town, because they can't get to the Wal-Mart to buy what they needed at home. Then, everything I've done as a performer has been worth it to me.

I hope to communicate to young people that Veterans Day and Memorial Day is not about an old man with a flag in a parade. That they understand what veteran means. What it took to gain that title.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

(THE SUNDAY FUNNIES)

That's all for today. Coming up next week, in his first and only Sunday interview in more than three years, former vice president, Al Gore.

Thanks for sharing part of your Sunday with us. And travel safe this holiday weekend.

We'll see you next week.

FOX - NEWS SUNDAY

CHRIS WALLACE, HOST: I'm Chris Wallace. A reduced role for U.S. troops in Iraq, next on "Fox News Sunday".

The Senate takes a major step toward immigration reform. But will it become law? We'll cover the legislative landscape with the Senate majority leader, Bill Frist, and the Democrats' assistant leader Dick Durbin.

Also, the FBI raid of a congressional office touches off a constitutional conflict and pits Republicans versus Republicans. What does it mean? We'll ask our panel, Brit Hume, Nina Easton, Bill Kristol and Juan Williams.

And on this Memorial Day weekend, our Power Player of the Week honors his fallen comrades, all right now on "Fox News Sunday".

And good morning again from Fox News in Washington. Let's get a quick check of the latest headlines. A senior U.S. military official says security in Baghdad could be turned over to Iraqi forces by year's end.

More peaceful parts of the country will be controlled by Iraqis this summer. The scaled-back role could allow U.S. troop levels to be reduced, but the official says there's still no timetable.

The Justice Department has asked two federal judges to dismiss legal challenges to the NSA warrantless wiretap program. The government says court action could cause grave damage to national security.

And officials in Indonesia say Saturday's earthquake killed more than 4,200 people and injured thousands more. The U.S. and other nations have pledged millions of dollars in aid.

And on this busy and controversial week in Congress, we're joined now by the Senate majority leader, Bill Frist.

Senator, welcome back to "Fox News Sunday".

SEN. BILL FRIST (R-TN), MAJORITY LEADER): Chris, good to be with you.

WALLACE: Let's start with immigration. Here's what you said after the Senate passed a comprehensive package this week. Let's take a look.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

FRIST: This is a success for the American people. It is a success for the people who hope to participate some day in that American dream.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Senator, is it a success for the American people that illegal immigrants are going to be able to collect Social Security benefits and even tax credits on past illegal work?

Is it a success for America that American officials must confer with Mexican authorities before they start building a fence on the border?

FRIST: Chris, the success for the American people is that we've got about two million people coming across our borders every year illegally. We don't know who they are. We don't know really what their intentions are. We've got hemorrhaging coming across our border.

So the success for the American people is that our government, the United States Senate, as a first step, have in a comprehensive way addressed a problem that is economic, that is humanitarian, and that has to do with our national security.

It has to be comprehensive, because that's the only way we can stop this hemorrhaging coming across our borders.

WALLACE: But how do you respond -- and I don't want you to go into each individual thing, but there are a lot of measures there which I mentioned. I'm getting a lot of e-mail about them -- I'm sure you are as well -- where people are saying this is a giveaway, we're a sovereign nation.

FRIST: Well, you know, I don't agree with everything in the bill. What I do agree with is that the Senate approach is saying that we've got to be tough on our borders, stop hemorrhaging across our border. Yet we've got to address the fact that we're a magnet to pulling people across the border by not enforcing the laws at our workplace.

The reality that you can't just take 12 million people here, millions of whom are fully assimilated into our society, and send them back, and the fact that we in this country do need a strong temporary worker program with people coming to this country on our farms, in our entertainment industry, in our hospitality industry, in our construction industry.

Those are the realities today. It's not necessarily politically popular. It's certainly not easy, as we've seen on the floor. But I can tell you the bill that came off the Senate floor -- not perfect; I don't agree with everything in that bill -- does reflect the overall will of the Senate.

It's a first step. We're going to go to conference. The president obviously is going to get very involved. And with that, we'll be able to address what is a national security, economic and humanitarian issue.

WALLACE: All right. As you point out, now the real hard work starts. You've got to work out a compromise with the House. On Friday, the lead House negotiator, Congressman Sensenbrenner, rejected the path to citizenship as a non-starter. Here he is.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SENSENBRENNER: Well, I reject the spin that the senators have been putting on their proposal. It is amnesty.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Would you, would the Senate, accept as a compromise a bill that takes out the path to earned legalization?

FRIST: Chris, I think we need to -- if the goal is national security, for example, it is mighty hard to say that we've got 12 million people living out around this country, out in the communities of our viewers today, and say you stay in the shadows, everything will be okay.

I think, you know, politically it is tough, and thus when we say comprehensive, temporary worker program, employer workplace, strong at the border, we do, I feel, have to address the 12 million people to bring them out of the shadows. So we'll see what happens.

The Senate has taken a position which is the position that I just outlined -- not perfect. There are things in there I don't agree with. The House has taken a position that does not look at the temporary worker program.

WALLACE: But I'm going to try and press this. Are you ruling out any bill that would strip out the earned legalization?

FRIST: No, I'm not going to -- I'm going to basically say we've seen the will of the Senate reflected. We've seen the House will. Although the majority leader in the House side, Majority Leader Boehner, said let's get together, let's look for common ground and let's move ahead -- again, it may not be politically popular in every single case, but let's do what's right for the American people.

WALLACE: Your conservative critics say that you have flip-flopped on precisely this issue, and they point out what you said last October when you were asked what should happen to the millions of illegals who are here in the country right now. Take a look.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

FRIST: They should be sent back. And, again, I will say, in principle, I oppose amnesty.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Now, you were still saying that same thing as recently as this March, two months ago, and yet you voted precisely for what you were then calling amnesty this week.

FRIST: You know, what we have done and what I did vote for is basically say if you've been here less than two years, you do get sent back. If you came across this border in the last two years -- from two to five years, you go into a temporary worker program.

If you're here greater than five years and you are willing to put another six years and then another five years up for a probationary period, and willing to pay a $3,000 fine, willing to learn English, willing to pay back taxes, willing to have a job, have to have a job, then you can be eligible for citizenship.

So let me go back just real quickly. In October of last year, the same time that clip was, I said we were going to take a border security, strong border security, to the floor. I did exactly that four weeks ago.

I said at that time that we were going to build it out with a strong temporary worker program. We did exactly that -- with strong employer workplace program. We did exactly that.

One last thing real quick is I think the debate has matured a lot. The American people are paying attention and I expect that to continue as we go to conference.

WALLACE: But, Senator, why was it amnesty to provide for these millions -- and the vast majority of them are the ones that have been here more than five years, so it's precisely that group. Why was it amnesty in October? Why was it amnesty in March? And yet you voted for it in May?

FRIST: No, but we did change it. And again, I hope that you and your viewers pay attention to what we actually did in the conference.

The bill that we put on the floor was to get 12 million people here, just leave them out, really no essential barriers there, and what we did is took that bill with compromise and made it into the zero to two years, you are deported, you go back home -- three to five years -- all that's new. That was amendments in the bill.

So the bill was radically changed -- again, not perfect. I call amnesty giving somebody who broke the law a leg up on citizenship. And that's not -- this bill does not do that.

It does give them a 16-year period in which they have to go through certain hoops before they're eligible for citizenship -- five years in the country, six years' probationary period, five years with a green card before they get to citizenship.

WALLACE: I want to ask you, because -- I want to move on to other subjects, but I want to ask you two more immigration questions, so let's try and go through these quickly.

One compromise that some House members are now suggesting is a phase program: Start the border enforcement now, delay the guest worker program until you've certified the borders are acceptable. You are secure. You voted for that...

FRIST: I did.

WALLACE: ... in the Senate and you lost.

FRIST: Yes, I lost.

WALLACE: Would you accept that as part of a Senate-House compromise?

FRIST: Well, no, I personally would, because I think, first and foremost, you've got to lock down the borders. You can't allow this hemorrhaging of millions of people. We caught 1.2 million people last year.

For every one coming across, at least two snuck across. We've got to lock down the borders. I do think we need a strong temporary worker program right now, and I think if we want to keep food on the table right now, that people can come here -- temporary, where people come for a period of time and go back home.

And I do lastly think the employer workplace -- we have to enforce the law of the land. We're not enforcing the law of the land today.

WALLACE: One more housekeeping question. Some Republicans have suggested put this whole conference off until after the November election.

FRIST: No, no. You can't do that. I know, first of all, politically -- I know the politics are out there. And I know people ultimately have to do what's in their best interest for their district or for their state.

But we've got a national security problem. It's an economic problem. It's a humanitarian problem. People are dying coming across these borders.

And if we as a governing party or as the United States Congress can't address these tough issues head on like we did in the United States Senate for four weeks, with good debate, open debate and amendment, improving the bill -- still not yet a perfect bill -- then we really shouldn't be here. It's not politically popular all the time, but we've got to do what's right for the American people.

WALLACE: You met with Attorney General Gonzales on Friday to discuss the FBI raid exactly a week ago of Congressman Jefferson's office.

Do you believe that a raid by the executive branch with a court order violates the separation of powers? And what did you discuss with Attorney General Gonzales?

FRIST: No, no, no. I don't. Was this a raid? I'm not sure if it was a raid or not. I mean...

WALLACE: They went into his office and...

FRIST: If somebody has a search warrant...

(CROSSTALK)

WALLACE: ... files.

FRIST: ... if there are accusations of bribery, of having lost the trust, abused the trust of the American people, criminal activity, no House member, no senator, nobody in government should be above the law of the land, period.

And a search warrant was obtained to go in. So to answer your question, no, I don't think it abused separation of powers. I think there's allegations of criminal activity, and the American people need to have the law enforced.

I don't think it was a separation of powers question. I've looked at it very carefully. There is in the Constitution, in Article I, this whole speech and debate wording. Since this type of event has never occurred in Washington, in the United States Congress, I think we all need to look and see what the clause -- what the case history on that clause means, and that's where the debate is today.

I think we've seen it pretty much put to bed now, I hope. I trust our Department of Justice in looking over and talking to the attorney general. I think they acted appropriately. I do think that we in Congress need to make sure whatever precedent this does set is one that shows that no congressperson is above the rule of law.

WALLACE: So specifically, you're OK, then, with this?

FRIST: I'm OK and I think the president handled it well, because we had tempers flying, and, I guess, people saying that he might retire, resign, and back and forth.

We don't need to be doing that. And so the president came in and put a pause, 45 days, to let things settle down. And I think over the last 24 hours things have really settled down. And I think the lawyers will decide.

I don't think it's an issue of the separation of powers or balance of powers, and so I'm comfortable where we stand today.

WALLACE: Finally, let's talk some politics. How much danger are Republicans in of losing control of the Senate this November?

FRIST: Well, I think right now, when you've got energy prices high, when you've got people, millions of people, coming across our borders today, when you've got the war in Iraq that people are uncomfortable in the sense of seeing people dying every day, not fully realizing the great progress that has been made in the last few weeks in standing up their government, that the environment is very, very tough.

I think our responsibility is to govern with meaningful solutions, taking the tough problems like immigration head on, dealing with them in a way that is civil, that is respectful, will earn and help re-earn the trust of the American people. Our agenda will be to support our troops overseas, secure peace and safety at home, securing prosperity. The economy itself is booming -- 5.3 million jobs in the last three years, 4.7 percent unemployment, lower than average of the '60s, '70s and '80s. That's the good news that's out there to counterbalance the other.

We need to demonstrate to the American people that we can govern with meaningful solutions on the tough problems that are out there.

WALLACE: All right. You talk about a lot of issues that affect people's lives, and yet you're going to bring two constitutional amendments to the Senate floor in the next few weeks, one to ban same-sex marriage, another to ban flag burning, both reportedly in the papers to mobilize your conservative base.

I have to tell you I talked to a Republican senator this week who said he may vote for both of them but said they're both pandering. Are gay marriage and flag burning the most important issues the Senate can be addressing in June of 2006?

FRIST: Let me tell you what the agenda is real quick. Secure America's safety here at home. I mentioned supporting our troops overseas, making sure we pass that supplemental bill, making sure we tighten down our borders, securing America, a healthier America, so we'll continue...

WALLACE: All right, but let's get to these two amendments.

FRIST: No, but let me tell you, because right now there's no prioritization there. Securing America's values -- and I hope tomorrow and today, as people see that American flag -- and I'm going to Arlington Cemetery tomorrow, and I'm going to see that American flag waving on every single grave over there.

And when you look at that flag and then you tell me that right now people in this country are saying it's OK to desecrate that flag and to burn it and to not pay respect to it -- is that important to our values as a people when we've got 130,000 people fighting for our freedom and liberty today? That is important.

It may not be important here in Washington where people say well, it's political posturing and all, but it's important to the heart and soul of the American people.

WALLACE: Sir, sir...

FRIST: Marriage, let me just -- marriage you asked about.

WALLACE: OK.

FRIST: Right now, why marriage today? Marriage is for our society -- that union between a man and a woman is the cornerstone of our society. It is under attack today.

Right now there are 13 states who passed constitutional amendments in the 1.5 years to protect marriage. Why? Because in nine states today, activist judges, unelected activist judges, are tearing down state laws in nine states today.

That's why I will take it to the floor of the Senate -- simply define marriage as the union between a man and a woman.

WALLACE: All right. We have less than a minute left. It's no secret that you're considering a run for president in 2008. You were asked recently about how difficult it is to be the Senate majority leader and considering a presidential run, and you responded with not one but four terribles.

You're going to be out of the Senate next year. You've decided not to run again. Will we see Bill Frist unplugged?

FRIST: You know, we'll see. As you know, I'm a physician. I spent 20 years in medicine. And that is my life. It's healing one on one. And I spent 12 years in the United States Senate, hopefully, being able to participate to a healing process, a better quality of life, of looking at things like immigration and health care and education.

And so I'll make a decision when I leave. I'm pretty comfortable who I am.

I am committed to healing, whether it's doing my best in politics, in policy, or the 20 years I spent in medicine. Then I'll make a decision after we leave.

WALLACE: Senator Frist, we're going to have to leave it there. We want to thank you so much for coming in, especially on this holiday weekend. It looks like you're going to have a busy summer, sir.

FRIST: Yes, indeed. Good to be with you.

WALLACE: Thank you.

FRIST: Thank you.

WALLACE: Coming up, what are Democrats offering the American people? We'll talk with their number two man in the Senate, Dick Durbin, after this break.

WALLACE: Joining us now from his home state of Illinois, the Democrats' assistant leader in the Senate, Dick Durbin.

Senator, welcome back to "Fox News Sunday".

SEN. RICHARD DURBIN (D), ILLINOIS: Thanks, Chris.

WALLACE: One of the features of the Senate immigration bill that has drawn the most fire, as we just discussed with Senator Frist, is this measure that requires that before any building of fences goes on along the U.S. border that the U.S. officials must consult with Mexican authorities.

You, in fact, voted for that, Senator. Is it the view of the Democratic Party that the United States does not have the sovereign right to enforce its own borders?

DURBIN: Well, of course we do. There's no question about it. And we have to start with good border enforcement. The Dodd amendment that you're referring to was part of a manager's package, but I supported it.

I mean, to think that we would build a fence without any conversation or consultation with Mexico -- that doesn't make sense.

WALLACE: Why do we need a consultation? It's our border. Why do we need to confer or consult at all?

DURBIN: Good fences make good neighbors, too. And remember that when it's all over, there'll be cities across the border from one another in the United States and Mexico, and you'll find in most instances they try to find a level of cooperation.

We ultimately want to have the cooperation of the Mexican government. That's going to make this a lot easier, to stop the corruption on either side of the border, to stop these coyotes that are taking thousands of dollars to push people across that border at the risk of losing their lives.

We should have consultation. There's nothing wrong with that.

WALLACE: Let's discuss, as I did with Senator Frist, the basis for a compromise. Will Senate Democrats accept any bill, as Congressman Sensenbrenner has suggested, that strips out the path to earned legalization?

DURBIN: Well, I'm troubled by that. I don't want to prejudge the conference, because I will be a conferee. There are parts of this bill that I don't like. I voted for Byron Dorgan's amendment which eliminated this guest worker provision.

You know, originally, it was 400,000 a year, and it was going to go up just with no end in sight. And because of amendment by Byron Dorgan and by Jeff Bingaman, we brought it down to 200,000 capped.

You know, I'm worried about the impact on American workers. We tried to put a sunset on it so that in five years we take a look. I don't want to lose American jobs as a result of this. But unfortunately, we didn't prevail.

So there are provisions in this that I'm concerned about. I want to make sure we treat people fairly, we have good border enforcement, but we also have to keep an eye on the American workers, is the bottom line.

WALLACE: Will Senate Democrats accept a bill -- and this is something that apparently is gaining some traction in the House -- that would have a phase program where you have to certify that you have secured the borders first and then a guest worker program kicks in?

DURBIN: Well, enforcement is critical. I agree completely with Senator Frist that the borders are out of control.

Over the last five years we've dramatically increased the personnel at the border and during the same period of time there's been a dramatic increase in illegal immigration. So enforcement by itself is not enough.

You need to do three things. Put that border enforcement as the first priority, and then workplace enforcement. Let employers across America know they can no longer be magnets for illegals coming into this country, that people are going to have to present tamper-proof I.D.s and that employers will be held accountable if they hire illegal people.

And then, finally, we have to deal with the people who are here living in the shadows. It's not amnesty. It's not automatic. As Senator Frist explained, it's a long, tough process that many of them will not complete successfully, but at least gives them a chance.

WALLACE: Senator, what about Speaker Hastert's insistence that he'll only bring up a bill -- if there's a conference agreement, he'll only bring up any bill to the House floor if it's supported by a majority of a majority, which means that most House Republicans will support it? Do you have any problems with that?

DURBIN: Well, Denny Hastert is my friend, and I've heard him say that in the past, and I think it's a good statement for a person who wants to remain as the leader of his own caucus. But I hope that he'll take a look at his national responsibility here.

This is an issue where bipartisanship is essential, and the vote in the United States Senate reflected it, both in the Judiciary Committee and on the floor. And if they can put together a strong bipartisan coalition in the House of Representatives for an answer to a complicated problem, we should do it.

We've waited 20 years to address this. The immigration system is in shambles. We can't walk away at the end of this year claiming political victories. We ought to do something constructive.

WALLACE: Let's talk about the raid on Congressman Jefferson's office last week. At a time when Democrats are trying to make a campaign issue out of an alleged culture of corruption in Congress, is there anything wrong with the FBI, with a court order, going into the office of a congressman where those FBI officials found $90,000 in cash stuffed into his home freezer?

DURBIN: Well, let me say two things. First, no one is above the law -- that's been said over and over again -- including members of Congress.

And second, call me old-fashioned, but I believe in the presumption of innocence. I will tell you, though, in this situation, what we know is overwhelmingly negative against Congressman Jefferson.

Getting down to the point in question here, this is rare. I don't think it's happened in history that the FBI has raided a congressional office. So that's why people in both parties have raised questions.

I asked my staff. I said has the FBI ever raided the chambers of a judge, another branch of government. The answer is yes. So at least there is precedent for going into those who are part of another branch of government.

The only other provision's a speech and debate clause in the Constitution. I'm not sure that you can stretch it to apply to this situation. In the next several weeks, we ought to take a hard look at it. I'm not going to rule it in or out at this moment. WALLACE: But you sound like you're, at this point, having researched it, somewhat favorably disposed toward the idea that the FBI did nothing wrong.

DURBIN: Well, I went to the first question of separation of powers. Can the executive branch, the FBI, raid another branch of government's official offices? And I find yes, they've done that when it comes to judges. So it appears that there's been some precedent for this.

Now, as I said, there are other provisions in the Constitution to look at, but that was the first question I asked.

WALLACE: Do you think, particularly with culture of corruption being such a big issue, that the House Democratic leader, Nancy Pelosi, is making a mistake making such a big issue of this?

DURBIN: No, I think she's trying to be assertive when it comes to any allegations of corruption and they're only allegations at this point. But I think that she has shown that she will be more forceful and show leadership if these allegations come forward. On the other side, on the Republican side, look how long some of these cases have dragged on involving Congressman DeLay and others. I think she is trying to say that given a chance in leadership, she'll be much more forceful in ending this culture of corruption.

WALLACE: All right. Finally, let's talk some politics. I want to ask you the flip side of the question that I asked Senator Frist. What do you think are your -- are the Democratic chances of taking over the Senate in November?

DURBIN: I think we have a chance. I think we have many good candidates across the United States, and I believe that the tide of public opinion is flowing in our direction. People believe that it's time for significant change in direction in this country.

The Bush-Cheney policies are being rejected overwhelmingly. I think the people understand that they have failed. We now have an endless war in Iraq and, sadly, we've lost over 2,460 of our best and bravest young men and women. No end in sight.

We know that the deficit situation is totally out of control. This president is the first president in the history of the United States to initiate a tax cut in the middle of a war.

We have no energy policy. We have no plan to bring health insurance to every single American. There's no vision or leadership in this administration. So yes, the stage is set for the Democrats to step forward in each of those areas and say give us a chance, let us try to take this one-party rule in Washington and bring some balance to government.

WALLACE: Finally, there's a story in today's Chicago Tribune talking about the possibility of Senator Barack Obama running for president in 2008, and you're quoted in that story, Senator, as saying I hope he will seriously consider it. Would you like to see Senator Obama run?

DURBIN: I will tell you this. You have to witness Senator Barack Obama in my state of Illinois, from southern Illinois through the Chicago suburbs, into the city, and across the United States to understand that this man brings something special to American politics.

He connects with people better than anyone I've ever seen. He is the number-one person sought after to speak at Democratic events across the United States of America. I think he has dramatic potential to unite this country, both red and blue. And yes, I'm encouraging him. But ultimately, it's his personal decision with his wife and...

WALLACE: You're encouraging him. As the number-two Democrat in the Senate, you're saying you would like to see him run for president.

DURBIN: I can tell you that I've sat down with him and said you ought to look at this long and hard. I know many people are saying wait, and he may decide to wait. But he ought to take a hard look at it.

WALLACE: Would you endorse him if he did run?

DURBIN: Well, let me tell you, Barack Obama is my closest colleague in the United States Senate. We've worked together on everything for the state of Illinois. And if he makes a plan to move forward, I'm going to be at his side.

WALLACE: Senator Durbin, we want to thank you for talking 2006, 2008. Thanks for coming in. Please come back.

DURBIN: Thanks, Chris. Thank you.

WALLACE: Coming up, our Sunday panel on the political showdown between the White House, the Justice Department and Capitol Hill over the search of a congressman's office. You won't want to miss it.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

REP. DENNIS HASTERT (R-IL), SPEAKER: We're going to protect the prerogatives of the House as far as the Constitution, and we think those materials ought to be returned.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SEN. JEFF SESSIONS (R-AL): No one is above the law in this country. This should not be characterized as a raid.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: That was Speaker of the House Hastert and Senator Sessions, two Republicans disagreeing about the controversial seizing of documents from a congressional office.

And it's panel time now for Brit Hume, Washington managing editor of Fox News, and Fox News contributors Nina Easton of Fortune Magazine, Bill Kristol of The Weekly Standard, and Juan Williams from National Public Radio.

Well, the controversy over the raid of Congressman William Jefferson's office last weekend just kept getting richer and richer this week with, as we heard, congressional leaders demanding that all of the records that were seized be returned.

We had two top Justice Department officials -- you can see them right there, the attorney general and the FBI director -- reportedly saying that they would resign if those records were returned to Congressman Jefferson, and the president stepping in to impose a 45-day cooling off period. The records are now being sealed in a Funk & Wagnall jar on -- whatever. I don't know -- what Johnny Carson used to say.

In any case, Brit, what do you make of it all?

BRIT HUME, FOX NEWS WASHINGTON MANAGING EDITOR: Well, it's glorious fun to watch. This is the stuff we live for around Washington. Here you've got this congressman who brought new meaning or real meaning to the term cold cash with 90 grand tucked away in tinfoil and food boxes in his freezer. The FBI thought hmm, maybe something's wrong here, maybe we ought to look in his office. The judge said OK. Dennis Hastert loses his temper about it, in effect, and starts talking through his hat about what the law provides and separation of powers. There isn't a legal authority anywhere who says this was on infirm constitutional ground.

But politically, it's another matter. The administration might have been able to notify leaders on the Hill that this was coming. They might have been able to bring the sergeant at arms or the other officials of the House of Representatives into it and thereby have avoided the ruffled feathers, but that's about all we're dealing with here, is ruffled feathers.

And the demand that the documents be returned strikes me as truly absurd. If this is evidence in a criminal investigation, you don't go give it back. So I think that those people in the Justice Department, the attorney general and the director of the FBI and others, perhaps, who threatened to quit were on solid ground.

The president, I think, may get some credit here for a rather deft defusing of the issue with the Taft-Hartley injunction on the whole cooling off period on the whole thing.

WALLACE: Nina?

NINA EASTON, BOSTON GLOBE: Well, the letter that went out to House Republicans from the leadership probably said it best. The opening line of that was is this a smart battle to fight. Perhaps not. And I think it's probably a battle that even Dick Durbin suggests they're going to lose constitutionally.

Secondly, Democrats handed -- as Brit suggested, they handed -- on a silver platter this case was handed to Republicans, this guy who was videotaped taking a bribe.

WALLACE: We should say allegedly.

EASTON: Allegedly -- yes, these are all allegations. Innocent until proven guilty. However, the alleged crimes are so egregious that Democrats are distancing themselves big time. But this was handed to the republicans.

This was a chance to turn around that party of corruption moniker that the Democrats are trying to stick on them this election year, and Denny Hastert, perhaps with the aid of overzealous FBI agents, managed to turn this into a split between House Republicans and the White House.

WALLACE: Bill, we usually refer to you as General Kristol. I'm now going to refer to you as Mr. Justice Kristol.

BILL KRISTOL, WEEKLY STANDARD: There you go.

WALLACE: Is there no legal basis for concern by congressional leaders? And let me flip it around. What if Congress were investigating a president and they got a court order? Could Capitol Hill police march down to the White House and go in and search the president's files?

KRISTOL: Well, actually, the president can't defy court orders. I think that was the Nixon precedent. Look, there's some separation of powers.

WALLACE: But I mean, it went to the Supreme Court.

KRISTOL: Right.

WALLACE: They didn't just sit there, the Capitol Hill police, with a court order and go into the White House.

KRISTOL: Right. There's no, as I understand it, sort of legal doctrine that lawmakers' offices are somehow sacrosanct. They do have the ability to say what they want on the floor of the House or the Senate. That's a different matter. This seems to have been executed carefully in terms of the FBI search.

So I think on legal grounds, the FBI and the Justice Department seem to be in pretty good shape. Hastert seems to have overreacted.

Maybe it was all a brilliant plot by Karl Rove. I was thinking about this. You know, we now have had four days of news about a Democratic congressman having $90,000 in his freezer and being under investigation for corruption, and it's a phony battle.

I think Hastert and Gonzales and Rove worked this all out in private last week. No, really, why not? I mean, Nina says well, this looks bad for Hastert. No, but look. What are we talking about here? We're talking about a Democratic congressman's corruption, not Abramoff's. So I think it was a very smart move by the Republicans. * JUAN WILLIAMS, NPR: Are you serious?

KRISTOL: No.

WILLIAMS: I just wanted to check.

WALLACE: As a politician once said to me, we're not that smart.

WILLIAMS: Exactly. Right. I mean, the one part of this story that I think we haven't picked up on is that I think that in a sense what we're watching is a proxy fight where you have Republicans on the face of it seeming to defend this congressman who's had two people already plead guilty to bribing him, and now the investigation goes forward.

But what you have is I think Denny Hastert and other Republicans worry that the FBI, that Justice, are going to next go after them in much the same way, and it may be their offices next.

HUME: You mean because of the Abramoff investigation.

WILLIAMS: Because of the Abramoff investigation and the sense that Justice and the FBI regard, you know, political contributions as bribes. And if that's the case, then a lot of what we've seen in the Jack Abramoff case may have tremendous resonance going forward. It may create additional problems. So they don't want the FBI just tracking around doing whatever they want.

And the second thing to say is, you know, there is something to be said as a matter of constitutional principle for keeping the executive branch away from the congressional branch -- I mean, the legislative branch. They shouldn't have a right to spend -- those guys went in there around 7 o'clock.

WALLACE: Eighteen hours.

WILLIAMS: And they were there until Sunday afternoon, from Saturday night to Sunday afternoon. And said they had a filter, but they didn't invite any officials of the House to participate. They didn't inform them.

I just think, you know, they stepped across a line, and it invites people then to say oh, the House of Representatives will let them tap your phones and have secret prisons, but once they start looking at the Congress, oh, then all of a sudden they're in a big dither. I mean, it looks like hypocrisy.

WALLACE: Brit, as I said, the story kept getting richer, because as the week went on, ABC News reported that Speaker Hastert, who was raising such a fuss about this FBI raid, was, in fact, the subject of a criminal -- or involved in a criminal investigation.

HUME: Included in.

WALLACE: Included. Well, we'll get to that in a second. And Hastert then fired back and suggested that this was a purposeful leak to try to intimidate him from his fight with the Justice Department. Let's listen to this exchange.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ROSS: Federal officials tell us the congressional bribery investigation now includes the speaker of the house, Dennis Hastert.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

HASTERT: This is one of the leaks that come out to try to, you know, intimidate people and we're just not going to be intimidated.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: What do you think of the ABC story? What do you think of Hastert's charge that there was some connection between that story and the fact that he was upset about the FBI raid?

HUME: Well, there's no way to speak for Hastert's allegation, because we don't know who the official was, the unidentified official in the Justice Department, which could include the FBI, that gave this information to ABC News. ABC News has now fallen back on the idea that well, we really didn't quite say he was the target of an investigation, we just said he was in the mix, that he was included, and they quoted their source in a subsequent story as saying you worded it very carefully, but people aren't reading it very carefully.

Look, ABC News came out with this story, worded the way it was. Included in the investigation, in the mix of the investigation, has an unmistakable implication, and that is the guy's under investigation.

We have now had an absolutely equivocal denial of that, not only from the Justice Department at one level, but when this Business about what well, what about being in the mix came along, Paul McNulty, the U.S. attorney, came out and denied that as well.

This looks like a bad story. They led their newscast with it. The implication was unmistakable. They ought to back off this story, and the sooner the better.

WALLACE: Memo to ABC News.

Nina, let me ask you, though, about the political fallout side of this. I mean, the fact is the president has got a lot of business he wants to do with Congress. Do you see a fallout? Is this going to make it harder for him to do business with the House and with Speaker Hastert?

EASTON: Absolutely. I mean, this continues -- it's going to make it harder to do business on the immigration bill. James Sensenbrenner, the head of the House Judiciary Committee, who opposes the immigration bill, by the way, next week is doing a hearing on this FBI raid matter.

WALLACE: I think he's given it the title reckless justice.

EASTON: Reckless justice. I mean, I think that says it all.

KRISTOL: I disagree. The president has had a pretty good few weeks here. He got house cuts through both houses of Congress and signed that bill.

He's got an immigration bill through the Senate that a month ago everyone said oh, it's going to blow up, they can never have a bipartisan coalition.

And now all you can read in the -- he gets a huge legislative victory and all you can read is the president's problems with the House. There are some problems with the House. But the fact is he has made more progress than anyone expected on key legislative issues in the last month.

He got a judge confirmed Friday, Brett Kavanaugh of the D.C. circuit. General Hayden -- there was supposed to be a great uproar over that. You know, the NSA program was going to make it impossible for him to be confirmed. He's confirmed overwhelmingly. I think the president's doing pretty well.

WALLACE: All right. We need to take a break here. But coming up, the Senate OKs its version of immigration reform. What are the chances a deal can be made with the House? Some answers when we return.

WALLACE: On this day in 2003, President Bush signed a $350 billion tax cut to increase the pace of economic recovery and job creation. It is the third largest tax cut in U.S. history. Stay tuned for more from our panel and our Power Player of the Week.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KENNEDY: America will be a stronger, fairer, more just place.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SANTORUM: This legislation, I think, is well outside of what I would consider responsible reform. It's misfocused.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: That's a small slice of the political divide that exists on Capitol Hill over immigration reform.

And we're back now with Brit, Nina, Bill and Juan. It's been suggested that what we're seeing here now in immigration and particularly with the compromise -- or the conference, rather, coming between the House and the Senate is a battle for the future of the Republican Party between the George W. Bush brand of compassionate conservatives and the more traditional law and order, enforcement-only side that we're seeing in the House.

WALLACE: Juan, what do you think is at stake for the Republican Party in what's going to happen now in the conference?

WILLIAMS: As I said last week, I think the president had been building a relationship with the Hispanic community that was going to pay off politically. But in terms of the conference, what he's got to hope is that somehow that the people in the House who have been the hard-liners, the ones who want to build walls, the ones who are, I think, on the wrong side of history here, will realize that it's in the party's best interest to have something of a compromise.

For instance, in the bill that the Senate approved this week you have a situation where they're going to provide for guest workers. But you can do that if you've been here five years or longer.

If you've been here two to five years, you still have to leave the country and go apply for a green card. And if you've been here less than two years, you just have to leave. You just can't do anything.

Imagine trying to get these two to three -- it might be four million people who have been here two years or less out of the country, much less in the House version getting 11 million or 12 million people out of the country. It's not practical, not workable, and it's going to hurt the Republican Party.

So that's the argument that they've got to make in the conference.

WALLACE: Brit, I want to -- before we get into specifics, I want to go back to sort of the bigger, overarching issue. Do you see a kind of divide here on where the Republican Party is going? I mean, is that the overarching issue?

HUME: Yes, I do, and I think that it comes down to really the short-term politics and long-term politics. The short-term politics are all running against the idea of a path to citizenship in particular.

The guest worker program isn't wildly popular either, but it's much more popular. The path to citizenship is what gives rise to the epithet that it's amnesty, and that is what the public is so outraged by.

And I think the -- also, the sense of laxness on the border which, you know, people overwhelmingly sense, feel, is a powerful force here, too. So the momentum politically is in favor of much tougher enforcement, and a lot of people would say that's all that needs to be done now.

I think in the long-term, however, if the Republican Party ends up being seen as the party that wouldn't support this vast and growing segment of our population -- namely, the Hispanics -- then I think that's long-term big trouble for the Republican Party.

The Democrats are in a situation where they can kind of, you know, lie down in the tall grass and wait and see what happens here.

WALLACE: Nina, I mean, let's talk about -- because we are going to get this fascinating thing, and according to Frist, we're going to see it pretty soon, this House-Senate conference.

You've got Sensenbrenner, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, the lead negotiator, saying no earned legalization at all, non-starter, forget it. Obviously, there are an awful lot of people, I think the majority in the Senate, who are going to demand that. Is there a basis for a compromise there?

EASTON: Well, I think what -- let's step back and look at what's happening in the House first. The House Republicans, vulnerable House Republicans, are hearing a very vocal segment of their constituents adamantly opposed to any kind of path to citizenship.

They want border security. Even a Chris Shays, a centrist...

WALLACE: Now, tell where he's from.

EASTON: ... from Connecticut, sort of centrist, northeastern Republican -- even he is saying he's hearing from constituents we don't want a path to citizenship, we want border security.

You have nervous Republicans. You have that combined with House Speaker Hastert saying I'm not going to bring a bill forward unless a majority of Republicans are behind it.

So I think even coming out of the House, what you're probably going to have is a bill that addresses border security but does not address this question of what to do with the 12 million immigrants here, illegal immigrants here.

WALLACE: You think that's the result of the conference.

EASTON: And I do think that that will -- that could be the result of the conference, that they kick the longer-term issue to a non-election year and they do just focus on border security.

WALLACE: And do you think the Senate would pass that?

EASTON: If you took out things like making it a felony to be here, the making it a crime to help immigrants here -- if you take out some of those pieces of the House, you know, what else -- I don't see the House compromising. WALLACE: Bill, let me ask you to role-play again. You're not general. You're not justice. You're a Republican congressman running for re-election in a district, and which is better for you, to have a comprehensive package that has tough border enforcement, but has some of these other things that aren't so palatable, or just have no bill at all?

KRISTOL: Unequivocally, to have legislation, I believe. It would be crazy to go home without a bill, I think. I think Chris Shays' -- you know, if Chris Shays' wealthy Connecticut constituents prefer having illegal immigrants working for them as gardeners so they can pay them less than letting these people have a path to citizenship, let them defend that principle.

What is the principle in which you say we have 11 million people here, and we employ them, and we pay FICA taxes for them, and they pay their taxes, and then, what, they don't have any chance to apply for citizenship? I think it's crazy. I think...

HUME: The question is...

KRISTOL: ... they need to stand up to their base.

I disagree that the politics of this -- if House Republicans want to listen to the 5 percent or 10 percent or 15 percent of the people who stand up at town meetings and yell and scream about the national anthem is being sung in Spanish, oh, my God -- that was a big controversy, wasn't that, two or three weeks ago?

Fox News alert, someone is singing the national anthem in Spanish...

WALLACE: Let's not make fun of Fox News alerts, now.

KRISTOL: Someone is singing the national anthem in Spanish, oh, my God. I think they need to stand up on this one and pass sensible, comprehensive legislation.

HUME: The thing I think you need to watch going forward here is how they can craft a compromise on the path to citizenship that might fly. I think the House would accept a guest worker program as long as the border enforcement provisions were tough enough.

The path to citizenship is the sticking point. If it could be redrawn so that an alien would have to go home first, that might be good enough. But if they can't fix that, it won't be -- I don't think it can be in any final bill that could pass the...

WALLACE: Thirty seconds left. Better to have comprehensive if you're a Republican congressman or no bill at all?

WILLIAMS: Oh, better to have comprehensive, especially looking down the path. But I mean, you know, we had American Idol and the big vote this week. Republicans will stay home if you don't say that this Congress can do something, even if it's a flawed bill, but get something done. And that's why the president's going to intervene. You watch. The president's going to play a bigger role.

WALLACE: Thank you, panel. That's it for today. See you all next week.

Time now for some mail, first about Senator John McCain's comments that his support for South Carolina's confederate flag back in 2000 was an act of political cowardice.

Brian Daly from Florida praised McCain. "It was absolutely fantastic to witness a politician clearly admit to a mistake."

But Joe Green from Alabama had a different reaction. "Whether it's inconsistency or plain old expediency, Senator McCain's got it bad. How could it be wrong for South Carolina to decide which flag flies but right for South Carolina and 49 other states to be required to decide the question of homosexual marriage?"

Up next, our Power Player of the Week.

WALLACE: On this Memorial Day weekend, America pauses to remember those who died serving our nation. At Arlington National Cemetery, honoring our fallen heroes is the full-time job of our Power Player of the Week.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

STAFF SGT ALFRED LANIER, U.S. ARMY: To me, I think it's a privilege to have the honor to be able to guard the unknowns because that's something that I can give back to my country.

WALLACE: Army Staff Sergeant Alfred Lanier is one of the leaders of the honor guard at the Tomb of the Unknowns. If he seems soft-spoken, just watch him do his job.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

LANIER: Ladies and gentlemen, may I have your attention, please? In keeping with the dignity of this ceremony, it is requested that everyone remain silent and standing.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year, a platoon of 30 guards the tomb honoring unidentified soldiers from the first and second world wars and Korea. The ceremony is simple yet powerful. A relief commander, like Lanier, changes the guard. Then a single sentinel keeps vigil. He walks 21 steps, pauses 21 seconds, and walks back. Twenty-one, as in a 21-gun salute, is the military's highest honor.

LANIER: Once you step on the plaza, you're counting every step you take. Every second is a count. So you have to be precise about it. You can almost go outside and change the guard blindfolded after you do it so many times.

WALLACE: Guards walk their post for an hour in winter, for a half hour in the blistering heat.

What are you wearing in the dead of summer?

LANIER: One hundred percent wool.

WALLACE: How hot does that get?

LANIER: You get pretty hot.

WALLACE: Do you ever think to yourself why are we going through all this trouble?

LANIER: Not really. We're going to give them the best that we can. And that's what we're doing.

WALLACE: They're just as meticulous behind the scenes. Guards pull a 27-hour shift, walking their post a dozen times, then get ready to do it all over again. They steam their jackets, then put back every piece of brass precisely measured. Just shining their shoes takes four hours.

LANIER: You shine it from the base with Kiwi, Kiwi and water, everything from the sole all the way up. You shine it up.

WALLACE: Lanier, who has been a guard more than four years, prides himself on their dedication. In September 2003, with Hurricane Isabel bearing down on Washington, Lanier was told he could take shelter.

Did you leave your post?

LANIER: No, sir.

WALLACE: Wasn't the wind whipping around at 60-plus miles an hour?

LANIER: Two trees fell on the north end, the south end of the plaza. But they did not endanger my life or the life of the sentinels that was there.

WALLACE: Lanier says Memorial Day is always a special time to stand guard.

LANIER: While you're on post, the veterans will be talking to you, telling you thank you for what you're doing, because they lost a lot of friend in those major campaigns that we had.

WALLACE: The tombs have been guarded every minute of every day since 1937. How long do you think this will go on?

LANIER: The tomb will be guarded. The unknowns will be guarded. There will be a vigil pulled until we can identify each remains.

WALLACE: And if that goes on forever?

LANIER: There will be guards out there forever.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

WALLACE: Four million people a year watch the changing of the guard at the Tomb of the Unknowns. If you haven't been there, be sure to include it on your next trip to Washington.

And that's it for us. Have a great holiday. We'll see you next "Fox News Sunday". But as we say goodbye, a special heartfelt thank you to those who have given their lives for our country.

CBS - FACE THE NATION

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

Today on FACE THE NATION, Republicans fighting among themselves, Democrats trying to find an agenda that goes beyond criticizing Republicans. What is going to happen in the midterm elections now just five months away?

President Bush's poll numbers are the lowest ever, Congress is mired in partisan fighting, and who speaks for the Democrats? As the war goes on and gas prices go up, will there be a turnover in Congress? Thirty-three Senate seats are at risk this fall and every seat in the House of Representatives.

We'll talk about it with the top strategist for Democratic Senate candidates, Chuck Schumer of New York, and Kentucky's Mitch McConnell, the number two Republican in the Senate. Elisabeth Bumiller of The New York Times will join in the questions, and I'll have a final word on Memorial Day. Have we forgotten what it means?

But first, the Senate midterms on FACE THE NATION.

Announcer: FACE THE NATION with CBS News chief Washington correspondent Bob Schieffer. And now, from CBS News in Washington, Bob Schieffer.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

And good morning again on this Memorial Day, which aside from its official meaning, is sort of the start of summer and the unofficial beginning of the fall campaigns.

And to talk about that this morning from Louisville, Kentucky, the Assistant Majority Leader Mitch McConnell from the Senate and, from New York City, Senator Chuck Schumer, the number one strategist for the Democratic Senate candidates. Joining in our questioning this morning, Elisabeth Bumiller, the White House correspondent of The New York Times.

Senator McConnell, let me start with you. Republicans are fighting among themselves in a way I haven't seen in quite a while. The war is going on, those gas prices are up, the Veterans Administration has found a way to let 27 1/2 million veterans--have found a way to let their records, including their Social Security numbers, to be stolen. The former speaker of the House, Mitch--Newt Gingrich, said the other day that Democrats didn't really need an agenda anymore, that really all they had to say is, 'Had enough?' I want to ask you, are you going to be able to hold your majorities in the Senate and the House this year?

Senator MITCH McCONNELL (Republican, Kentucky; Assistant Majority Leader): Well, we're certainly going to hold a majority in the Senate. It has been a challenging period. The president's numbers are much lower than we would like. But it's important to remember, Bob, that we only have one retirement, one open seat in Tennessee, which is a pretty red state. And if you look back at 1994, which I know is the year the Democrats are hoping will be similar, what maybe they can expect in 2006, it was indeed the best Republican congressional election of the 20th century, and we did regain the House and Senate. But on the Senate side, we only beat two incumbents. All the rest the changes were in open seats. We only have one retirement this year, as I indicated, in Tennessee. About as good a place to have an open seat from a Republican point of view as possible. Could the Democrats get back the Senate? They could. They'd have to win the open seat in Tennessee, would have to knock off five incumbents and would have to count on us not winning anywhere else where they currently occupy the seat. I'm not saying it's impossible, but if I were a betting man, I'd bet that the Senate's going to be in Republican hands after the November election.

SCHIEFFER: Now, I noticed you did say that we think we can hold it in the Senate. Senators sometimes don't like to talk about what's going on in the House, but what do you see going on in the House of Representatives right now? Do you think it is in danger of being captured by the Democrats?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, I just don't think that I'm an expert on all of these House districts. There are 435 of them. I keep reading, as you do, that they-- the Republican--Republicans should be able to hold the districts. That there are fewer competitive districts than in the past. And, after all, at the end of the day, people have to decide whether they like their own member of Congress. I'll give you an example. Right here in Louisville, Kentucky, my hometown where I am today, there is a Democrat-leaning district that's been held by a Republican, who's extraordinarily effective, for 10 years. I think there's virtually no chance that the Democrats could knock off our popular local Republican congresswoman because she's done a great job.

SCHIEFFER: OK.

Sen. McCONNELL: And it seems to be that's the challenge that they have over in the House side.

SCHIEFFER: Well, OK. Let's get Chuck Schumer's take on all this.

What do you think's going to happen, Senator?

Senator CHUCK SCHUMER (Democrat, New York; Chairman, Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee): Well, I think that we're going to do very, very well. The American people want change and new direction. They want a change because they see that basically this administration has been incompetent, whether it's on Katrina, or Dubai Ports World, or Medicare Part D or the war in Iraq. They see an administration that seems to substitute ideology and cronyism for competence. And they see a Congress that simply rubber stamps everything the administration does.

We Democrats have a new direction and we are going to change things should we get into power. We're going to do six things right away. First, we're going to pass a tougher--tougher ethics bill. Second, we're going to pass a real energy bill that does what the people need, not the oil companies, so we'll have energy independence. Third, we're going to restore tuition deductibility so that middle class families can pay for college, something the Republicans just took away. Fourth, we're going to have a good Medicare Part D program so people can get prescription drugs and the bill will be much more aimed at the average recipient than the insurance companies and pharmaceutical companies. Fifth, we want to improve our armed forces. We want more special forces. We want to double them. And we want better intelligence so we can get the terrorists before they get us. And finally, stem cell research, so that families who have members suffering from Alzheimer's or juvenile diabetes can get some relief. For all those reasons, we're doing very well. In fact, while we do have a tough map, Mitch is right, the Republicans are not ahead in a single blue state, if you look at the polls, and we are even or ahead in five of theirs. So it's a long way to the election, but if you held a snapshot today, it would be 50/50.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well, let's go to Elisabeth.

Ms. ELISABETH BUMILLER (The New York Times): Senator Schumer, some Democrats are talking about if they--if you win in 2006, that there's a lot of talk of subpoena power and that the Democrats will spend their last two years of the Bush administration investigating. Is that kind of talk going to put off some moderates, perhaps? Do you agree...

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, I don't think that's what Democrats want to do in either the House or Senate, Elisabeth.

Ms. BUMILLER: Nancy Pelosi has said so recently.

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, she has said that she wants to focus on the things that I've talked about. We're going to focus on better ethics and better energy, better education, better health care, better security, and stem cell research. We know that people want real change. They don't want partisan fighting. They don't want investigating. They want to make their lives a little bit better. And the Republicans, led by George Bush and then a rubber stamp Congress that does just what he want, haven't done that. That's why 60 percent of all Republicans say they want--I mean 60 percent of all people say they want change, even a significant number of Republicans. And that's what we're going to do. We know--the door is open, because people don't like what the president and the Republican Congress are doing, but we're not going to walk through it unless we have a good platform, the kind that I outlined.

Ms. BUMILLER: Do you--who do you see as the most vulnerable Democrats in this--in November?

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, we're doing amazingly well. When the election started in 2005, we had six incumbents. They've targeted in every case the candidate that the Republican National Committee wanted to recruit, their number one candidate didn't run. Of those six incumbents, one doesn't even have an opponent of much note, Kent Conrad, and the other five are ahead by more than 10 points. The idea that the races are going to just be anti-incumbency is wrong, because our incumbents, as I said, are ahead by 10 or more, and their incumbents are even or behind in a good number of the races.

SCHIEFFER: Well, Senator McConnell, let me ask you about this whole business of immigration, which is--has not just caused a huge gulf of difference between Republicans and Democrats, but it's split up Republicans. I'm told this morning that 75 percent of the Republicans in the House now oppose any kind of amnesty or any kind of program that leads to citizenship for illegal aliens that are al-or illegal immigrants that are already in this country. Yet that is what the president, something similar to that, that's what the president wants. Is this going to play a role in these elections? And, in fact, do you believe that there's going to be an immigration bill at the end of the day that contains any of that?

Sen. MCCONNELL: Well, I think there's--I hope there's going to be an immigration bill that's heavily weighted toward securing the borders. My personal view is that a comprehensive approach is better, but if we cannot get a bill between the House and Senate that adequately deals with border security, I don't think there will be a bill. I'd rather have one, and I'd rather have a guest worker program that works. This is going to be a hard conference. And, Bob, if I may, just briefly, you were asking about the Democratic agenda, and Chuck--it's good to hear Chuck talking about it. We intend to talk about the Democratic agenda this fall, too, because Americans have forgotten what they do when they're in the majority. I can tell you what they'll do. They'll rave--wave the white flag in the war on terror, they'll raise taxes, and they'll try to censure the president in the Senate and impeach the president in the House. This is what their agenda really is. And the American people, after all, in the fall, will have a choice. It isn't going to just be a referendum on Republicans. It's going to be a choice between Republicans and what we've done and the Democrats and what they would do if they were in the majority for the last two years of the Bush presidency.

SCHIEFFER: Well, what about that, Senator Schumer?

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, here's the bottom line, and this is how the election will play out. Democrats are talking about things that will make people's lives better, that affect the average voter, whether it's gas prices or education or health care. And, you know, the Republican Party, whether it's the president or the Senate leadership, doesn't have anything to say other than these sort of fear tactics aimed at Democrats. Now, it's not going to work. It's not going to work for a couple of reasons. First, because we have a real agenda. Second, because the Democratic Party over the years has become a mainstream party, and we're much closer. On the immigration bill, where Mitch and I voted on the same--this is an example--Mitch and I voted for the same bill, a balanced, tough bill. Yes, tough borders and, yes, no amnesty, but a path to earned citizenship. But they're busy fighting with each other. They're spending so much time trying to secure their base that we're able to reach out to mainstream Republicans in the middle.

And I'll tell you one interesting thing, and this has happened over and over. I got a call from a fellow, suburbs of Denver, telecom exec. He said, 'I'm a conservative Republican. I voted for Bush in '04, I'm voting for the Republican in '08. But let me know how I can help. We need some balance in this government, and we need change in direction.'

Ms. BUMILLER: Senator...

Sen. McCONNELL: Bob...

Ms. BUMILLER: Senator McConnell, let me just ask you, do you--how much do the president's low approval numbers--he's hovering in the low 30s right now--how much does that affect these races?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, it's not helpful. I can see it's not helpful. We'd certainly like for the president to be in better shape.

You know, what Chuck and his colleagues are doing in the Senate is block and blame. This week in Roll Call, one of our Capitol Hill newspapers--I'm just holding up a copy here to illustrate the point--Chuck and Harry Reid were telling the Democrats don't co-sponsor any bills with Republicans who are in hard races. That gives you a sense of what's coming. They don't want to cooperate. They want to block progress and try to blame us. It's not going to work. Block and blame didn't work in '02, block and blame didn't work in '04, and block and blame won't work in '06.

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, let me just say here that the American people want change. They want a new direction. And Mitch says we're blocking progress. We are--yes, we are standing up to George Bush when he's doing the wrong thing. And 60 percent of Americans, a little more than 60, think he is not doing the right thing either on domestic policy, where for a long while they thought that, or even foreign policy, which they haven't. So I think we're doing two things. Yes, we're standing up to George Bush when he's wrong, but we are also putting forward a positive platform on education and health care and all these other issues that will make America's lives better. And that's why Democrats are doing well, and that's why we're going to do well in the election.

SCHIEFFER: Senator McConnell, what do you think it will come down to in the poll? Will it be the war in Iraq? Will it be the corruption that Washington finds itself engulfed in? Will it be this immigration thing? What do you think will be the overriding issue in these campaigns?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, the ethics issues that have developed, which are certainly disturbing, are totally bipartisan in nature. I don't think that's an issue that, frankly, advantages either side. I think where we have popular incumbents running for re-election, Bob, in all likelihood the key thing is going to be whether their constituents feel that they've done a good job representing the state and the nation. And this notion that somehow bipartisanship will come about with Democratic majorities is belied by the fact that, in the Senate, the whole strategy during most of the Bush administration is to encourage Democratic senators not to cooperate on anything.

SCHIEFFER: Well, are you saying then that the war is not going to be a factor?

Sen. McCONNELL: I think the war does have a dampening effect on the overall popularity of the president. On the other hand, individual members of the Senate do not dictate the strategy in the war. And also, we're going to be reminding Americans that we haven't been attacked again here at home since 9/11. It's not an accident. It's not a quirk of fate. It's because we've been on offense going after the people who would do us harm in Afghanistan and in Iraq. And we're going to remind people that, even though the going has been difficult in Iraq, as a result of fighting these kind of people where they are, we haven't had to fight them in Washington and New York. The absence of attack here at home is success.

SCHIEFFER: All right, is that--does that argument work, Senator Schumer?

Sen. SCHUMER: No, absolutely not. If you look, the American people see there's really no plan in Iraq. There's no light at the end of the tunnel. We're told 18 months ago that we're going to turn over the policing duties and the military duties to the Iraqi armed forces, and they can't do the job at all. We don't have body armor for our troops, either on their bodies or their humvees. And what the Democrats have done, and this is what we should do, we are holding the president accountable. As the opposition party in Congress, we're saying, 'Where is your plan?' That's why we were able to force the Senate to pass a resolution of accountability back in November, which got about 79 votes. The war is going to be a real problem for the president because he simply has not persuaded the American people that he has any path, any light at the end of the tunnel, while Democrats are doing what our job is, which is to hold the president accountable on these issues.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well I have to thank both of you this morning. We'll stop there. Obviously this is the discussion that's going to go on right up until Election Day.

We'll be back with a little round table to talk about it some more in just a minute. Thank you.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

And we're back again with Elisabeth Bumiller, the White House correspondent for The New York Times for what? The last five years, Elisabeth?

Ms. ELISABETH BUMILLER (The New York Times): Almost five.

SCHIEFFER: And you're getting ready to go off on book leave now to write a book about Condoleezza Rice. I'd just like to get your thoughts about your observations over these past five years watching the Bush administration. And I must say, this week I found it extraordinary that the president went before a news conference with Tony Blair and said, 'You know, maybe I used kind of the wrong language when I was talking about "bring 'em on," and Osama bin Laden dead or alive.' Now we know Laura Bush has corrected him for some of those...

Ms. BUMILLER: Right.

SCHIEFFER: ...tough things he's said in the past, but he seemed genuinely regretful that he has said them--these things. What do you make of this?

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, it's the second term; he's in a very weakened political position. He took enormous political hits also in the first term when--I remember there was a press conference in April of 2004 when he was asked, 'Can you think of any mistakes you've made?' and he couldn't think of a thing. And this is a little like the husband who can never admit he was wrong. But he took a lot of hits for that.

And I also think, at the time, he thought that admitting a mistake in the midst of a re-election campaign was just going to be fodder for John Kerry. Now he's two--he's two years out, you know, and--and I also think it reflects what--what he has said in private. And his friends say that he's much more reflective about the last three years in private than he has ever been publicly.

SCHIEFFER: So you don't think--and it's hard to ascribe motives to anyone--this was not something he had planned out. This is just something--this is sort of how he feels now?

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, it was also something he's planned out. Let's be--let's be honest here. He ever--ever since he couldn't answer that question in 2004, the White House has--has prepared for the question coming up again, and I think that he certainly had a ready answer. It came out very quickly. And a lot of his critics have said that, 'What's the big deal? He was just admitting mistakes about language. He was not admitting mistakes, say, that they would say about disbanding the Iraqi Army or was Jerry Bremer the right person for the job.'

SCHIEFFER: Or going into Iraq...

Ms. BUMILLER: Going in at all, right.

SCHIEFFER: ...in--in the first place.

I want to ask you also about this rather unusual situation that developed when the FBI went in and searched the office of a congressman, a Democratic congressman, and I must say there's no sympathy that I can find around Washington for him. This man was photographed taking a $100,000 payoff given to him by an FBI undercover agent. But the FBI went into his Capitol Hill office with a federal court order and searched it, and the Congress is in just a complete uproar, demanding that--that the first time that the FBI has ever gone into a congressman's office. Apparently the speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert, went to the president. As a result of that, the president sealed the documents that the FBI got. But we're also told that his own attorney general and the FBI director threatened to resign if--if he had told the FBI to give those documents back. Where does this--where does this all end?

Ms. BUMILLER: I don't know. He's given the 45-day cooling off period. I think the president had to weigh--he weighed in. It was extraordinary that he weighed in himself and said let's--and he made a decision that we were going to wait. It shows, I think, first of all, that he again is a little weakened politically because he was trying to placate a very angry Congress. For the last five years, this is a president who has pushed the powers of the presidency to new--to new limits--to new--without limit, and Congress is tired of it. But the other thing that I--I noticed that Senator Schumer has said over the weekend was that--was that, you know, this had been going on for five years and--with the American people, but when it hits home in Congress, then when it directly affects members of Congress, then there's an uproar.

SCHIEFFER: Now, where does this immigration situation--do you think there's an end? Do you think there's going to be a bill in the end? Congressman Sensenbrenner, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the House said this morning that flatly there will not be a bill if it includes any kind of a program that can be described as amnesty or if it provides this path to citizenship, as the president wants.

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, The New York Times doesn't like it when I predict, and I can obviously--I don't--I just don't have any idea.

SCHIEFFER: Mm-hmm.

Ms. BUMILLER: It looks really tough for the president right now. He is, you know, his--his position is so out of step with--with House Republicans. His--his position is a very centrist position. The House Republicans would say it's very liberal, that he wants to give, you know, some of the 11 million illegal immigrants in this country a chance at citizenship, and certainly allow to stay here on a temp--at least on a temporary basis. So what he's been trying to do, we saw it a week and a half ago, he--he went all the way out to Yuma, Arizona, for the day, stood on the border and said he wanted--he would like to see a fence in parts of the border. He's never talked like that before. He gave a prime-time speech saying he wanted 6,000, you know, additional National Guard troops on the border. This obviously is--is to placate the House. Judging from Sensenbrenner, it doesn't look like it's working so far.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well, good luck on your book.

Ms. BUMILLER: Thank you.

SCHIEFFER: And we'll be talking to you along the way.

We'll be back with a final word in just a minute.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

Finally, every year on the Memorial Day weekend, we hear the words 'This is a time we honor those who have fallen in battle in defense of this country.' But do we really take those words to heart? Do we do anything more than make a mental note, 'Oh yeah. This is when we honor the military people who got killed,' and then head out to the ball game or a picnic? I have an idea that won't interfere with your weekend.

What better way to honor the dead than to remember the wounded? Medical science has improved to the point that thousands upon thousands of young Americans who would have died in previous wars are returning home. But not as God made them, but as war has left them, with horrible injuries. Many are multiple amputees. We cannot yet know if this war will prove worth it, but the one thing we do know is that, years from now, whatever the answer to that question, these young people's arms and legs will not have grown back.

There are many ways to help them, but here are two fine organizations you may want to consider: the Walter Reed Society at www.walterreedsociety.org, which helps families of the wounded meet unexpected financial crises, and the Yellow Ribbon Society at www.YellowRibbonFund.org, which helps families find housing and transportation while service members are in the hospital. I know that all of them will appreciate it.

CNN - LATE EDITION

WOLF BLITZER, HOST: It's 8:00 a.m. here in Los Angeles, 11:00 a.m. in Washington, 7:00 p.m. in Baghdad and 10:00 p.m. in Jakarta, Indonesia. Wherever you're watching from around the world, thanks very much for joining us for "Late Edition."

We'll bring you the latest on the devastating earthquake in Indonesia in just a moment. First, though, let's get a quick check of what's in the news right now,

CNN's Fredricka Whitfield joining us from the CNN headquarters. Fred?

(NEWSBREAK)

BLITZER: Thanks very much, Fred.

Let's get some more details now on that severe earthquake in Indonesia, where the death toll is approaching 4,000. Thousands more are injured. Tens of thousands are homeless.

CNN's Dan Rivers is in the quake zone. He's joining us live via video phone from Jakarta. What's the latest on the scene, Dan?

DAN RIVERS, CNN CORRESPONDENT: We spent the day, Wolf, touring some harrowing scenes of destruction.

We've been to villages where 95 percent of the houses have been destroyed or damage, where the wounded are still lying untreated and where people are having to bury their loved ones who've been killed.

They are terrible scenes here in Indonesia, reminiscent, of course, of the tsunami a year and a half ago which I covered as well.

The scale of the destruction is perhaps not as big, the number of deaths, of course, not that big. But nevertheless, there are awful scenes, traumatic scenes for the residents of this province which has been devastated by this earthquake measuring 6.3.

BLITZER: Dan, are the people getting the supplies, the emergency supplies, the food, the water, the medicine that they need, or is that just beginning to come in?

RIVERS: It's only beginning to come in. We saw some Indonesian soldiers out on patrol here, clearly affecting the situation. Obviously, a huge aid operation is beginning to swing into place. A lot of aid agencies were here because they were concerned about a volcano that was going to explode further north, Mount Merapi. That never happened. But because of that, a lot of aid agencies were in the area. So perhaps the situation is better than it could have been, in that a lot of the NGOs are here on site. But clearly, they are overwhelmed by the sheer number of people. I mean, almost 4,000 people are now confirmed dead. And the death toll is rising all the time.

BLITZER: Dan, are they expecting the death toll to rise significantly or is the worst of it, hopefully, just there?

RIVERS: I think the feeling here is that the worst of it has happened now, that a lot of the bodies have now been recovered, certainly the places we visited today.

This is a huge area, by the way, that's been affected, about 80 kilometers across, 50 miles across. But the villages we visited today, they'd already buried most of the dead and were, obviously, clearly very traumatized and saddened by what's happened.

I didn't get the impression that there are a large number of people still waiting to be discovered below the rubble. A lot of the buildings that have collapsed are small houses, single-story houses.

And basically, as soon as you have a quake happen, people came out, they regrouped, they worked out who was missing. And then they, sadly, discovered those who had perished or who were injured.

So, while I think the death toll will rise significantly, I think it will creep up slowly. I think the worst has probably come to light now.

BLITZER: CNN's Dan Rivers, on the scene for us. Dan, we'll check back with you. Thank you.

International relief agencies are already on the ground in Indonesia, And joining us now by phone from Jakarta is Howard Arfin. He's the reporting coordinator for the International Red Cross and Red Crescent. Mr. Arfin, thanks very much for joining us. What are the greatest needs right now?

HOWARD ARFIN, REPORTING COORDINATOR, INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS/RED CRESCENT: Well, we're in a significant mobilization, as you might imagine.

And the immediate needs, as is often the case with this scale of disaster, is to provide safe, clean drinking water so that people don't get unnecessarily further sick from water-borne diseases such as cholera or diarrhea, which is a killer of young children; basic food, when you have your food services disrupted; shelter, which we're beginning to provide for people who are having to sleep outside -- we've already gotten 10,000 blankets distributed and there's more on the way -- and just basic first aid services, which are being provided now by about 400 local Indonesian Red Cross volunteers in the disaster zone.

BLITZER: Are planes able to get in with these emergency supplies? This is a relatively remote area. ARFIN: Up until late this afternoon, the answer was no. And we got one large emergency field hospital into the Yogyakarta area by truck during last night.

But the government authorities were quick to begin reparations on the airport. And we believe that, within the last couple of hours, the airport has been prepared for the arrival of humanitarian flights, which will mean that some of the large aircraft that we are preparing to ship in more quantities of tents will be available to begin doing that, and beyond that to continue bringing in food and medical supplies by truck.

BLITZER: What is the latest estimate as to the number of people who have been made homeless by this earthquake?

We know about 4,000 have been killed, thousands others injured. What about the numbers of people who are without homes right now?

ARFIN: The numbers that we've been receiving just recently, the United Nations coordination meeting, with figures provided by the government -- and these are very early figures in these very early days -- is about 25,000 homes that have been seriously damaged or in fact destroyed, which represents well over 100,000 people.

And of course, the circumstances are that the entire population is staying out of doors because of the continuing aftershocks. So it is very difficult to determine how many people are just staying out of their homes to avoid further collapse and injury and how many in fact have no homes left to go to.

As things settle down and people return to their homes, we'll have a better idea of how many people actually need temporary shelter.

BLITZER: Howard Arfin is the reporting coordinator for the International Red Cross and Red Crescent.

Good luck to you and all the people who work with you, Mr. Arfin. Thank you very much.

Let's get some more now. The United Nations is stepping in to try to provide relief, as well, to these earthquake victims.

Joining us now by phone from Oslo, Norway is the U.N.'s emergency relief coordinator, Jan Egeland.

Mr. Egeland, thanks very much for joining us. What about the international response?

Is it forthcoming or is it lacking?

JAN EGELAND, U.N. EMERGENCY RELIEF COORDINATOR: There is an enormous international response. Many countries have pledged funds. I think the whole world sees that Indonesia is now struck by its third major catastrophe in just one and a half years: the tsunami, then the earthquake that struck the island of Nias and then this earthquake. There have also been hundreds of other quakes and aftershocks. So Indonesia needs our help. But Indonesia is doing most of the job itself. We should not overestimate the importance of international assistance. What we're doing is complementing what the army is doing, what the Indonesian government is doing.

The president himself is now in the area directing this effort. And of course, this is Indonesian heartland to the extent that this is heavily populated, it has a big infrastructure, and there are much Indonesian supplies there because we were all preparing for a possible outbreak of the volcano in this area. And those supplies are now benefiting the quake victims.

BLITZER: You're coordinating the international relief. How much money have you been committed to so far from the United States, from Europe, from Japan, from other countries, some of the more wealthy countries?

EGELAND: Well, there is already considerable sums initially pledged from North America, from Europe, from Australia, from several Asian nations. We will issue an appeal for our work after we get the report from our assessment teams, who are already in place. We had a plane arriving with coordinators, experts, you know, people who can set up operations coming in yesterday and today.

We had people there who started work because they were there to prepare for the possible volcano outbreak. I think there will be an enormous need for assistance because, yes, there have been perhaps 4,000 killed so far but there will be tens and tens of thousands without a home, and there are already at least three times as many wounded as those -- and injured as those who are confirmed dead.

BLITZER: Are you going to be making your way toward the scene, Mr. Egeland?

EGELAND: That may well be. But I have already teams coming in from the area where we have lots of people working on tsunami relief and the follow-up of the earthquake at Nias last spring. So this is not Aceh tsunami land in the sense that here we have people, we have coordination structures up and running, and the 100 international organizations who are either involved or planning to get involved have gotten a clear message that we need to be well-coordinated in clusters, concentrating on water and sanitation, health, food and emergency shelter.

BLITZER: Jan Egeland is the U.N.'s emergency relief coordinator. Good luck to you. Good luck to all the people involved in this emergency relief operation. Thanks very much for joining us. We're going to have much more on this story coming up throughout "Late Edition." Terrible tragedy unfolding in Indonesia.

Just ahead, though, the new Iraqi government wants security and democracy, but can it control the violent insurgency and the sectarian warfare? Iraq's deputy prime minister, Barham Salih, weighs in live on his country's next steps. And he's interviewed countless newsmakers. Now it's NBC's Tim Russert who's meeting the press. I'll talk with him about President Bush, the upcoming Congressional elections, and his new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers."

Plus, my special conversation with former President Jimmy Carter. He shares some very strong opinions on the nuclear standoff with Iran, human rights and lots more. "Late Edition" continues right after this.

BLITZER: Our web question of the week asks this: Do you agree with the U.S. Senate measure making English the national language of the United States? You can cast your vote. Go to cnn.com/lateedition. We'll have the results at the end of this program.

Straight ahead, with a new Iraqi government in place, what lies ahead for that country? My conversation with Barham Salih, Iraq's deputy prime minister. That's coming up live. You're watching "Late Edition," the last word in Sunday talk.

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer reporting today from Los Angeles. With Iraq's new unity government finally in place, its top priority is trying to bring order and security to the country. But relentless attacks from insurgents, coupled with widespread sectarian violence, is making all of that extremely, extremely difficult.

Joining us now from Baghdad is Iraq's deputy prime minister, the acting national security adviser, Barham Salih. Deputy Prime Minister, welcome back to "Late Edition." A difficult moment in Iraq's history. There is, though, some hope. First of all, what's the latest on the inability, at least so far, to have a permanent defense minister or interior minister? Where does that stand?

BARHAM SALIH, IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER: Well, one can say the search goes on. The difficulty lies in the fact that the prime minister and the government has committed to bringing in two people that will be agreed to by the main parliamentary blocs, people who will be competent and who will be able to work together and with the prime minister, to help with the security file.

These criteria makes it difficult to really narrow down the search. I just spoke to the prime minister, and he's committed to make the decision very soon, and I hope we will bring into the team of the government two competent Iraqis who will help bring about security and help resolve many of the security challenges before us.

BLITZER: I know last weekend when they announced the new government, the hope was within a week there could be a new defense minister and a new interior minister. That week has now come and gone. When do you think there finally will be these appointments? SALIH: My hope is that people outside would understand the scale of the difficulties that we're dealing with, certainly on the security file. There is a turning point in Iraq, and this government is a manifest of Iraq's national unity. For the first time since the fall of Saddam Hussein's regime, we have credible representatives from the Sunni community taking part in the government.

And we have committed as part of that compact to include all communities of Iraq, that the ministers of defense and interior will be agreed to by the main communities. That is a difficult challenge because in this polarized society, there are different views about particularly the issue of security. But the prime minister and the government has committed to this.

And one note of caution. You should not judge Iraqis by timetables that from afar may sound easy to meet. We are dealing with a difficult, difficult political and security challenge, and while we are making progress, we need to overcome these things, and sometimes we need more time than people are willing to give us.

BLITZER: Is it a foregone conclusion, Mr. Minister, that the defense minister will be an Iraqi Sunni and the interior minister, who's in charge of the police and homeland security, if you will, will be a Shia?

SALIH: That, I would say, is a safe bet, a conventional wisdom, generally agreed to principle, but it is not by any means a foregone conclusion.

The searches have been within those parameters, but if a good Shia were to come and be agreed to by the Sunnis to that particular post of defense minister, I'm sure that it would be considered favorably.

But at the moment, the search is within the parameters that you just mentioned but not a foregone conclusion as such.

BLITZER: The British defense secretary said this on Tuesday. Des Browne said, "Armed militias are widespread and a grave threat to the stability of Iraq and the rule of law. Any government, if it is to survive, must establish a monopoly on the use of force. At the moment the Iraqi government clearly lacks this."

Is the new Iraqi government of Prime Minister al-Maliki taking steps already, right now, to disband, to disarm the various militias?

SALIH: The prime minister made this issue a priority. And this is one of the most difficult issues that will face this government and perhaps this government will be judged by.

We know who the terrorists are. And the terrorists are on one side and the rest of the people of Iraq are on the other. Everybody should be united in tracking the terrorists.

But the issue of organized armed groups who are acting outside the state and outside the law are becoming a serious problem for our politics and our society. And we have to deal with it.

The prime minister has committed to taking serious steps in that direction. And all the key parliamentary blocs are supporting him in this mission.

I cannot say that this will be done easily because we have a serious problem in that context and certainly in certain areas of Iraq. But the prime minister and the government are determined and committed to resolving this issue.

We know that it will be a bit difficult, but we are committed to doing so because without that, there will be no stability in Iraq.

BLITZER: Let me play for you what the U.S. ambassador to Iraq, Zalmay Khalilzad, told me last Sunday here on "Late Edition." Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ZALMAY KHALILZAD, U.S. AMBASSADOR TO IRAQ: Well, it's still a challenge, an important challenge.

The prime minister has said, and we agree with him, that those ministries should be occupied by people who are unifiers, that are not people with ties to militias, people who are broadly accepted by the Iraqis.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: This militia issue, clearly a critical issue. I assume you want the Badr militia, the Mahdi militia to be disbanded. What about the Peshmerga?

You're a Kurd. The Peshmerga is the militia of the Kurds in the north, some 70,000 militia members in the Peshmerga.

Will that be disbanded as well?

SALIH: I've just come back from Kurdistan. I was on a short trip to Sulaymaniyah and Erbil. Thank God the situation there is stable and secure because the Peshmergas have been enrolled in the security services, the police.

And in accordance with the Iraqi constitution, there is a provision that every federal region in Iraq can have its regional guards, very much like your National Guards in the United States.

So the Peshmerga is really not an issue in dispute as such. The issue of militias and the issue of bringing in people in charge of the security portfolio that are unifiers and are seen by most Iraqis as competent and non-sectarian will be an important challenge for this government.

And this is why the prime minister really has taken his time and is consulting and consulting. And I hope, at the end of this process, we will bring in people who can do this difficult task. And we'll deal with the issues of militias by laying ahead of us a road map for rehabilitation and reintegration of these people back into public life of Iraqi politics or Iraqi state.

BLITZER: So let me just press you on this point. So there's one standard, as you see it, for the Peshmerga, which will be integrated into the new Iraqi security force, another for the Shiite militias, the Badr militia, the Mahdi militia?

Is that what you're saying? Those militias should be disbanded but not necessarily the Peshmerga?

SALIH: No, I'm not saying that at all. The Peshmerga -- and you have to remember the historical context as well. The Kurdistan regional government has been in existence over the last 14 years. And this issue of militias has been dealt with for almost a decade now. That has been dealt with, by and large.

But even with the Iraqi constitution that was ratified a few months back, there is a single provision calling for the establishment of regional guards, very much like the United States, where you have a national guards for the states.

But these, all military units of Iraq, including the Peshmergas or the regional guards of Kurdistan, will be going back to the same chain of command, ending in Baghdad at the ministry of defense and the prime minister.

BLITZER: Here's what Nouri al-Maliki, the new Iraqi prime minister, said on Wednesday. He said, "Our forces will be able to take over the security file in all Iraqi provinces in a year and a half."

Assuming he's right, what does that say about the U.S. and coalition troop deployment in Iraq?

When do you believe significant numbers of foreign forces in Iraq will start leaving?

SALIH: I will not want to talk about timetables, really, for one fundamental reason. The Iraqi situation is a complex one. And we are dealing with a tough war against international terrorism and the remnants of the Saddam regime.

I think we are making progress. There is significant progress in the way that Iraqi forces are trained and are recruited.

I mean, if you were to compare the situation now compared to where we were a year ago, you will see significant progress.

And I think, if this pace is maintained, we will be seeing more reliance on Iraqi troops and Iraqi security organizations as opposed to the multinational forces.

And I think the challenge for this government and, for that matter, the international coalition will be to place Iraqis in the front to assume security of their own country.

I have reviewed plans that the multinational forces will be handing over full security responsibilities to Iraqi security organizations and police and military in various provinces of Iraq at different parts of the year.

And I think you will see more and more emphasis on Iraqi troops as opposed to multinational forces.

In terms of significant reductions of the American and other forces, this, again, depends on the situation on the ground. But I don't think it will be impossible to see significant reduction in these troops in the foreseeable future. But we should not commit to a specific timetable because we do not want to give the terrorists any hints or any ideas that they can wait us out. This war against international terrorism in Iraq must be won and must be won decisively. Failure is not an option here in Iraq.

BLITZER: Barham Salih is the deputy prime minister of Iraq. You've got a huge challenge ahead of you. Good luck to you. Good luck to all the Iraqi people, Mr. Minister.

SALIH: Thank you.

BLITZER: Thanks very much for joining us on "Late Edition."

And still ahead.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: We're the last word in Sunday talk. You know that, right?

TIM RUSSERT, HOST, MEET THE PRESS: Because if it's Sunday, it's "Meet the Press."

BLITZER: And we're the only one that's seen live around the world in 240 countries.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: A special conversation coming up with my Sunday morning talk show colleague, Tim Russert. He'll talk about his new book, politics in the United States, lots more.

Up next, though, a quick check of what's the news right now, including the latest on the pope's visit to Poland. Stay with us.

(NEWSBREAK)

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting today from Los Angeles. He's a familiar face on Sunday morning for millions of television viewers. That's because, for the past 14 years, Tim Russert has interviewed a host of newsmakers as the moderator and managing editor of NBC's "Meet the Press."

Now he's the author of a powerful new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers." I spoke with Tim Russert about his new book, as well as his take on President Bush, the prospects for Democrats in this year's Congressional elections and lots more.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Tim Russert, welcome to "Late Edition." Good to have you back on the program.

RUSSERT: My Sunday morning partner.

BLITZER: Good. Thank you. You've got two excellent books now. "Big Russ and Me," you made it number one. This new book, "Wisdom of Our Father's: Lessons and Letter from Daughters and Sons," we're going to get to this new book momentarily.

I've got to pick your brain. It's Sunday morning. Let's talk politics a little bit. Our latest CNN poll has Bush job approval at 36 percent approve, 57 percent disapprove.

If you take a look at some all-time low presidential job approval ratings, Nixon was at 24 percent in mid July '74, Jimmy Carter was at 28 percent, Bush 41 was at 29 percent. Clinton's lowest was at 37 percent in early June 1993. Bush 43 was a 34 percent earlier. Some polls, not ours, have him even down at 31 percent.

Can this guy come back anytime between now and the mid-term elections so that the Republicans presumably might be helped?

RUSSERT: It's going to be very hard. He needs the right confluence of the sun, the moon, the stars all aligning and adjusting. The White House is very relieved there's now a new prime minister, a new government in Iraq. And they're hoping that they can secure that country, which would allow, prior to the mid-term elections, the withdrawal of a significant amount of American troops. That would be good news.

Secondly, there's going to be another hurricane, Wolf. And can this administration and the local government of Louisiana perform better than they did during Katrina, and show the American people they've earned something? Third, what's going to happen to gas prices? If they go down a little bit.

And the president gets lucky on those three issues, if you will, can he get up above 40 percent? Possibly, but no one can predict it.

BLITZER: Here's a -- you're talking about Iraq, which is hovering over this administration like no other issue. His approval as far as the handling of the situation in Iraq is at 34 percent, 62 percent disapprove.

But you talk about a new government emerging now in Iraq. Here's what the president said the other day. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: Our nation's been through three difficult years in Iraq. And the way forward will bring more days of challenge and loss.

The progress we have made has been hard-fought, and it's been incremental. There have been set backs and missteps like Abu Ghraib. They were felt immediately and have been difficult to overcome. Yet, we've now reached a turning point in the struggle between freedom and terror.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: He's trying to balance a realistic assessment. At the same time, he uses the phrase "a turning point," which may or may not happen.

RUSSERT: We do not know if this will be a turning point. The reason is, are there enough young Iraqis who will step forward and say, "I believe in this new democracy. And to prove that, I'm willing to shed my blood and give my life."

It is then and only then can Americans start coming home. That's the unanswered question. Do the Iraqis believe, across the board, in their government and willing to take on the insurgency without any question?

BLITZER: Here's the poll on Democrats and Republicans, the generic poll as far as Congress and the mid-term elections are concerned. Among registered voters in our CNN poll, 52 percent say they prefer Democrats, 38 percent say they prefer Republicans.

But that's the generic. When it comes to specific races, obviously people sort of like their own personal congressman or congresswoman, even though they might not like the Congress as a whole.

RUSSET: But that number indicates right now we'll have a preference for the Democrats. There's no doubt about it. In 1994, we saw similar numbers. And for the first time in 40 years, the Republicans captured the House and the Senate.

The highest number predicted in '94 was that the Republicans would capture anywhere from 35 to 40 seats. They wound up winning some 55, 56, 57 seats.

Who knows what's going to happen? But right now, the Democrats are very well-positioned. Why? In the words of Newt Gingrich, the Republican who led the '94 revolution, the Democrats's best bumper sticker is "Had enough."

BLITZER: Well, let me play you a clip from what Newt Gingrich said on "Meet the Press" on May 14. Because he's a smart guy, obviously. And he was the architect of turning that Congressional situation from Democrat to Republican back in '94. Listen to what he said to you.

RUSSET: Great.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

NEWT GINGRICH, FORMER REPUBLICAN HOUSE MEMBER: Congresswoman Pelosi could not explain what her speakership would be because it'd be so far to the left they would guarantee the Republicans re-election. So I was saying partly, they can't possibly put together a Contract with America because Howard Dean and Nancy Pelosi and their allies are so far to the left they can't be clear what they would do: raise taxes, create more big bureaucracy, have a much weaker system of defending America, just go down the list.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: That's Newt Gingrich.

RUSSET: Yeah. I think you'll see a lot of Republicans saying, "OK, you know what we've done. But what will they do if we hand over power? Where do the Democrats stand on taxes and on gasoline prices and Iraq? They're opposed to us, but what do they stand for?"

Some Democrats want to put together a plan to show the American people a contract, if you will, with the American people, 2006 vintage.

Other Democrats are saying that's suicidal. We don't have to say anything. Sometimes nothing's a real cool hand. We're not the Republicans. Vote them out. Send us in. Time for a change.

BLITZER: Karl Rove, the president's top political strategist, is a very smart guy. He wins elections. He won in 2004 for the president. Here's what he said at the American Enterprise Institute on May 16.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KARL ROVE, PRESIDENTIAL ADVISER: Ultimately, the American people are a center-right country, presented with a center-right party with center-right candidates, will vote center-right.

BLITZER: Is that still applicable, as they used to say?

RUSSERT: Well, people will look at ideology and say, does the country tilts that way, center-right, a bit? Perhaps. But people are also very pragmatic and result oriented. And they see a problem with Iraq and the management with the war, a problem of Katrina and the management of that situation, a problem with gasoline prices. I happen to think that performance and concerns and anxiety really does trump ideology.

BLITZER: Here's what some strategists, Republican strategists think the Republicans need to do. They need to energize their base to get out the vote in November.

One hot social issue is gay marriage. Bill Frist, the Senate majority leader, told me on "Late Edition" just the other day...

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SENATOR BILL FRIST, MAJORITY LEADER: Right now, marriage is under attack in this country. And we've seen activist judges overturning state by state law. That is why we need an amendment to come to the floor of the United States Senate to define marriage as that union between one man and one woman.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Do you suspect that this constitutional amendment is going to get anywhere in the Senate or the House?

RUSSERT: It won't pass in the Senate. There's certainly not enough to sustain any kind of signature by the president. It won't happen. The votes aren't there.

So what happens then? The Democrats know the Republicans are forcing them to go on the record in favor or against gay marriage. Because they want to go to the voters -- the GOP does -- and say, "Look, you don't know what they're going to do if they take over the government. They won't tell you. We're going to tell you who they really are."

The Democrats, however, have some weapons in their arsenal. They can continue to introduce resolutions about Iraq, resolutions about Katrina, resolutions about gas prices. They can talk about immigration.

This Democratic Party now is playing very openly for the Hispanic vote not only in this election, but in future presidential elections. That's why you see such a battle for the soul of the Republican Party as they try to wrestle what to do with 11 million illegal immigrants.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And still ahead, Tim Russert talks about what inspired him to write his new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers." And we're standing by to speak live with the mayor of Los Angeles, Antonio Villaraigosa. And my special interview coming up with Jimmy Carter. "Late Edition" will be right back. But first, this.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Ken Lay, what's his story? The Enron founder was convicted by a Texas federal jury this week on conspiracy and fraud charges stemming from his energy company's 2001 collapse. Lay, who's expected to appeal the verdict, served as chairman of what was the seventh-largest company in the United States when Enron declared bankruptcy in 2001. Federal prosecutors accused him of orchestrating a conspiracy to artificially inflate profits and hide millions in company losses. Lay is scheduled to be sentenced on September 11. He faces up to 45 years in prison.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." We return now to my conversation with NBC's "Meet the Press" moderator and managing editor, Tim Russert.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: It's never too early to talk about presidential politics 2008. Our CNN poll had Hillary Clinton -- that was back in February -- with 39 percent, everybody else a lot less, John Kerry, Al Gore, John Edwards.

As you can see on the Republican side, back in February, Rudy Giuliani was at 33 percent, John McCain at 28 percent, everybody in single digits. What do you see shaping up right now?

RUSSERT: A wide-open race in both parties. The first time in a half century where you won't have an incumbent president or vice president seeking the nomination.

Hillary Clinton, the front-runner of the Democratic side. She'll raise $60 million in her re-election bid in New York State, spend $20 million, and have kitty of $40 million for the presidential race.

But John Kerry, John Edwards, Joe Biden, Chris Dodd, Mark Warner, Tom Vilsack, Bill Richardson, Evan Bayh, they're not going away. Russ Feingold. One of them believes that there's going to be an alternative to the front-runner, an alternative to Hillary. And they want to position themselves for that role.

On the Republican side, I see John McCain, Mitt Romney of Massachusetts, George Allen of Virginia kind of in the top tier, waiting to see Rudy Giuliani, the former mayor of New York, is going to get in. And then Governor Huckabee, Senator Brownback, others contending.

I think eight to 10 candidates in each party running for president of the United States.

BLITZER: That's great for us.

RUSSERT: Every Sunday morning.

BLITZER: Fabulous. A couple of other things before we get to the book. Alberto Gonzales, the attorney general, he said something last Sunday that got a lot of journalists and others nervous.

"We have an obligation," he said, "to enforce the law and to prosecute those who engage in criminal activity. If the law provides that that conduct is in fact criminal and evidence is there to support it, we have an obligation, of course, to look at that very seriously." Asked whether the Justice Department was going to prosecute journalists, specifically New York Times journalists for reporting that story about warrantless wiretaps. It looks like this Justice Department, this Bush administration is taking steps that previous administrations, as far as journalists are concerned, wouldn't take.

RUSSERT: And it has a real chilling effect on our ability to report the news. We rely on people who are going to talk to us, in confidence, about something that they believe, in terms of government policy, is not right.

Some people call them whistle-blowers. Other people call them confidential sources. But we rely on that information. It is necessary for the American people to become informed in the whole context.

I've been to countries, Wolf, you've been to countries where the papers and the news airwaves are filled only with official government information. You want to want to live there. I know my own situation with the Valerie Plame case where I was asked about a conversation of complaint. A White House official called me -- Scooter Libby -- to complain about a cable TV news program. And after that people would say, well, gee, you know, if we say anything to you, are you going to be called before a grand jury to testify? It has a chilling effect.

BLITZER: That Scooter Libby testimony, the prosecutor said this in the indictment of Scooter Libby, the vice president's former chief of staff. "Mr. Russert said to me did you know that Ambassador Wilson's wife works at the CIA. And I said no, I don't know that. And then he, Russert, said, yeah -- yes, all the reporters know it. And I said again, I don't know that."

That's what the prosecutor quoted Scooter Libby, as having told the grand jury. That's how your name got involved in this whole uproar.

RUSSERT: Yeah, much to my surprise. And what we now have learned from Patrick Fitzgerald is that Mr. Libby talked to the vice president, at least six other government officials, several reporters and two officials of the CIA about Valerie Plame before he even talked to me.

BLITZER: And the whole Valerie Plame, the wife of Joe Wilson -- that never came up in the conversation that you had with Scooter Libby, based on your testimony?

RUSSERT: It did not. It was a conversation of complaint about something that had been on the air.

I wish I had known about Valerie Plame. I wish I had known who she was. Because it would have been an interesting discussion to have within NBC. Hey, I have a great tip, a great story. Should we report this?

I found out about her when I read Bob Novak's column on that Monday in the Washington Post.

BLITZER: Let's talk about this new book, "Wisdom of our Fathers." You wrote this almost as an after thought to "Big Russ and Me," which became the number one bestseller on the New York Times list.

How did that come about? What made you decide you needed a follow-up with these letters that you got from sons and daughters?

RUSSERT: After I had written "Big Russ and Me," I went around the country. And people said, you know, Big Russ is a great guy. Would you make out the book to my dad though, Big Stan, Big Mike, Big Herb, Big Mario, Big Manuel? They perceived it as an invitation to talk about their dad.

And then I received 60,000 letters and e-mails from all across the country, daughters and sons, talking about not a special vacation or a material gift but "let me tell you, Tim, about what I learned from my dad."

And in fact, a friend of mine from Oklahoma put it this way, "The best advice is I want to see a sermon, not hear a sermon." They taught us through their actions, their hard work, their sacrifice, their devotion.

One father said to his daughter, "You worry too much." He built her a little box and said put all your worries -- write them down and put them in this box. Two weeks later he opened up and said, "This one's gone. Don't worry about it. This one's gone. Don't worry about it. You have to understand; don't let these worries get to you. Understand what's important in life and deal with it." Best advice ever. Wolf, we had a Web site, wisdomofourfathers.com. It still exists, wisdomofourfathers.com. People flooded it saying let me tell you about my dad.

One daughter said her mother died at an early age. Her father became Mr. Mom. He sewed the dresses and he went off to work. She sent him a Mother's Day card and a Father's Day card.

And my goal in reading these letters was that, one, they deserved to be read. Two, they deserved to be remembered.

And can I construct a book like "Wisdom of our Fathers," which is a road map for every parent, young or old; this is how to get it right. What will your kids say about you 10, 20, 30 years from now?

They remember the small moments that make the big difference in their lives. That's what the book's all about.

BLITZER: "Wisdom of our Fathers: Lessons and letters from Daughters and Sons," the follow up to "Big Russ and Me."

Tim Russert, thanks for coming in.

RUSSERT: Thanks, Wolf.

BLITZER: Congratulations and good luck.

RUSSERT: Go Buffalo.

BLITZER: And still to come, Los Angeles mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa and former president, Jimmy Carter.

And don't forget our Web question of the week: "Do you agree with the Senate measure making English the national language of the United States?" Log on to CNN.com/lateedition to cast your vote. The results at the end of the program. We'll be right back.

BLITZER: This is "Late Edition," the last word in Sunday talk.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JIMMY CARTER, FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: I think it's a very serious mistake when the United States refuses to have talks with problem regimes.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: From the nuclear standoff with Iran to alleged abuses at Guantanamo Bay and anxiety about the high cost of gas. What moves should the U.S. make? Former President Jimmy Carter speaks out in a special interview.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SENATOR BILL FRIST, R-TENNESSEE: This is a success for the American people. It is a success for people who hope to participate someday in that American dream.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. RICK SANTORUM, (R-PA) This legislation, I think, is well outside what I would consider responsible reform.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: The U.S. Senate takes a step toward immigration reform, as the issue shifts to the House of Representatives. Perspective on the immigration battle and the growing political power of Hispanic Americans, from Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa.

Plus, the latest on the devastating earthquake in Indonesia. Nearly 4,000 people are confirmed dead.

Welcome back. We'll go live to Indonesia in a moment. My interview with Jimmy Carter, that's coming up, as well. First, though, let's get a quick check of what's in the news right now. CNN's Fredricka Whitfield's standing by from the CNN Center. Fred?

(NEWSBREAK)

BLITZER: It's been a devastating 36 hours for tens of thousands of people in Indonesia left homeless by a powerful earthquake. The death toll right now around 4,000. Thousands more are injured. CNN's Dan Rivers is in one of the hardest-hit areas. Where exactly are you, Dan?

RIVERS: We're in the city of Yogyakarta at the moment, which is right in the center of this region that's been devastated by the earthquake. We spent the day traveling further south towards the very heart of the devastation. And really harrowing scenes that we saw.

We went to one village, where almost every single building had been flattened by the force of the earthquake. There were wounded people at the side of the road awaiting treatment. One elderly gentleman with a really bad break on his leg and cuts and lacerations all over his face. And in that one village alone, of the 4,000 people that lived there, 2,000, that's half the population, had been treated for serious injuries and taken to hospital. So that gives you an idea of just the sheer number of injuries, let alone the number of people that have died.

BLITZER: I know we have a long delay. But a quick follow-up question. Is there a sense that emergency relief operations are arriving, as needed? Or is there a huge, huge delay and that lives could be lost in this interim?

RIVERS: I think emergency aid is beginning to filter in. But the sheer scale of this has obviously overwhelmed the Indonesian authorities. We were in one village today, and the Indonesian army came past. But there wasn't much sign of them actually doing much to help these people. The airport has been knocked out of action here. The runway is actually cracked, which has really hampered getting a large amount of aid into this area. We understand that may be repaired tomorrow, which will dramatically help get more aid to the people that really need it.

BLITZER: Dan Rivers on the scene for us in Yogyakarta, Indonesia. Dan, we'll get back with you. Thanks for your important work for our viewers. Much more on this story coming up here on CNN. Stay with CNN for all the latest on the fallout from the disaster from that earthquake in Indonesia.

Since leaving office in 1981, former U.S. President Jimmy Carter has been very active and very outspoken on international and domestic issues. This past week, I had a chance to speak with him about human rights around the world. The Israeli/Palestinian conflict. The nuclear standoff with Iran and lots more.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And joining us now is the former president of the United States, Jimmy Carter. Mr. President, thanks so much for joining us. Welcome back. CARTER: It's good to be with you again, Wolf, and the folks in the situation room.

BLITZER: Thank you. I know you have a major conference that you're involved with, it's human rights. I read your remarks on human rights. I want to get to all of those issues, including the human rights aspects of this enormous immigration debate that we've seen unfold in this country over the past several weeks.

You recently wrote in the Miami Herald this. You said, "Competing legislation from the House of Representative on immigration has strong racist overtones." What specifically are you referring to?

CARTER: Well, it's such a punitive approach to the very sensitive issue of immigration. And I try to point out in my editorial that these people who come to our country, and even the ones who employ them are good, honest, hard-working, dedicated people, and they don't need to be punished.

And so, I think whenever you single out a particular category of people for just punitive legislation, as I believe was done in the House version of the bill that might be passed, it does have overtones distinguishing between a particular class of people.

BLITZER: So you're referring specifically to the House legislation, which would categorize these illegal immigrants as felons?

CARTER: That's correct. And also calls for the deportation of all of them and the categorization as you just said, of every one as a convicted criminal. This is not the proper approach to a nation that prides itself on being the champion of democracy, freedom and human rights.

BLITZER: The president, the current president's plan calls for strong border security, a guest-worker program and a path towards citizenship. It's sort of -- pretty much coincides with what senators Kennedy and McCain have in mind with the Senate. Certainly supports, but there's strong opposition in the House. On this issue, I take it you don't have a lot of disagreement with President Bush.

CARTER: No, that's exactly right. I think that the approach that has been put forward and they're currently being considered, the bill in the Senate as supporting, the way I understand it, by President Bush is very compatible with my own views.

BLITZER: What about English as the official language of the United States? Should there be legislation that makes English the official or national language of the U.S.?

CARTER: No, I don't think so. You know, we've gotten along for more than 200 years without excluding other languages. This is a country that's kind of a melting pot for languages around the world, and I don't think there's any need for it.

It's just kind of one of those emotional issues that can turn one part of America against another. You know, we've survived OK without such language, and I think just to specifically say that it's the only language that we will accept officially is a wrong approach.

BLITZER: The speech you delivered on human rights this week was a powerful speech. It included an indictment of current U.S. policy on many sensitive issues in terms of human rights. Let me read an excerpt from what you said at the Carter Center.

You said, "In the last few years we've seen an embarrassment come to my own country in the realm of human rights." And you went on to say, "The equation that used to be taken for granted between a great democracy and a great champion of human rights has certainly been brought into question."

Specifically, what are you referring to? What is embarrassing to you as far as America's current human rights policy is concerned?

CARTER: Wolf, what we have here is a group of human rights heroes that come to us from troubled nations; that is, nations within which human rights abuses are a common thing. And in the past, I've always been inspired almost without question by the fact that United States was the champion of the protection of human rights, the declaration of human rights, the Geneva Conventions.

And recently, of course, as is well known, it's been covered on CNN as well as it has in all news media in the world, we have been guilty of having people in this country and in our own prisons, in Guantanamo and even in the Gulf region, without accusation being made against them, incarcerated for now years without a trial, without access of lawyers, sometimes even deprived of access to their own families.

Now, it's been highly publicized that there have been many instances of torture. And I don't think there's any doubt that the United States has, indeed, on occasion, when attention has been focused on those prisons that are ours, some of them still secret, that we have actually taken prisoners and transported them to other countries where they have very well been tortured.

So these kinds of signals that go from the United States, defended by some of the top people in our government, have sent a wave of consternation and disappointment and disillusionment to people who are applauding for human rights in their own countries.

And they see their own oppressive governments using these examples from the United States to condone similar activities against helpless people.

BLITZER: The secretary of state, Condoleezza Rice said this last Sunday. She said, "Obviously, we don't want to be the world's jailer. We will be delighted when we can close down Guantanamo, but I would ask this: If we do close down Guantanamo, what becomes of the hundreds of dangerous people who were picked up on the battlefields on Afghanistan, who were picked up because of their association with Al Qaida?"

What would you say to Condoleezza Rice, the secretary of state?

CARTER: Well, last year, the major recommendation that a similar conference made was that Guantanamo be closed immediately. And, of course, that's been a similar position taken by the United Nations and by other international organizations that are concerned about human rights.

If they close Guantanamo, there are several things that can be done. One is, those prisoners that we accuse of crimes, let them be put on trial openly and -- so that the world can observe the process.

Those that we believe are guilty, let them be sent by their own country -- back to their own countries of origin, some even in Europe, Western Europe, some in the Gulf region, and let them be put on trial there.

Others that are not susceptible to trial and conviction, let them be released. This has been done in the past following previous wars in which the United States has been involved. I think the same thing can be done now.

As a matter of fact, there are top people in the administration now, as you well know, who are seriously considering the closing of Guantanamo. And my prediction is that within the next year or two, Guantanamo will indeed be closed.

BLITZER: Should the U.S., should President Bush authorize direct talks between the United States and Iran on Iran's nuclear program?

As you know, right now, that dialogue consists of others. The Europeans are talking directly to the Iranians, but there's been no direct dialogue. The Iranians apparently want this kind of dialogue. What do you think?

CARTER: I think it's a very serious mistake when the United States refuses to have direct talks with problem regimes. This applies in North Korea and it also applies, now, in Iran.

When we back away from any sort of direct discussion with the leaders of those countries, and threaten either nuclear action against them -- it's been rumored even to consider the use of nuclear weapons -- and either that or very severe punishment through economic sanctions and say, we refuse to talk to you at all about this problem, I think it's a mistake.

And I don't know what would be the result of the discussions, but since Iran, under great pressure now, has offered, for the first time in more than 25 years to have direct talks with the United States, I think it seems to indicate that the Iranian leaders see that they've made a mistake and that they need to make a firm commitment to the United States and to the rest of the world, we want to improve the high quality of nuclear materials, but that they will be used only for peaceful uses.

That is the generation of electricity. And if we work out a good deal between the United States and Iran and Iran and the rest of the world, then we will put them under the observation of the international -- with the energy commission. So I think direct talks would be very helpful.

BLITZER: Here's what the Israeli prime minister, Ehud Olmert, says about the Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

He says, "Ahmadinejad talks today like Hitler spoke before seizing power. We are dealing with a psychopath of the worst kind, with an anti-Semite. God forbid this man from ever getting his hand on nuclear weapons." That's what he told the German newspaper, Bild, on May 1.

He said similar things to me last Sunday when I interviewed him. If, in fact, this is a new Hitler, what's the point?

I guess that what's the Israelis would say. What's the point of talking to someone if he's simply a new Hitler?

CARTER: Well, I don't disagree with what Prime Minister Olmert has said about the danger of Iran becoming a nuclear power. That's obvious, I think, to everyone in the outside world, that Iran should not become a country with a nuclear arsenal, which I think would be very dangerous to world peace.

But I don't think that has anything to do with the advisability of using diplomatic means which President Bush has endorsed, including direct talks with Iran, maybe with that as a limited agenda item. I don't see any relationship between the two.

BLITZER: Here's what the president said this week, President Bush, in a direct warning to the Iranians. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: The United States and the international community have made our common position clear. We're determined that the Iranian regime must not gain nuclear weapons. I told the prime minister what I stated publicly before. Israel is a close friend and ally of the United States, and, in the event of any attack on Israel, the United States will come to Israel's aid.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Anything in that section that you would disagree with?

CARTER: No. I don't think there's any doubt that, if any of the neighboring countries, including Iran, should make an attack on Israel of a military nature, that we would respond and help to defend Israel. That's been the policy of our country since long before I became president, in those ancient days.

And I believe that what President Bush has said is applicable, relevant, to this present administration, but all the previous administrations, I would say, going back at least 50 years.

BLITZER: And coming up, could U.S. drivers see a rerun of what occurred during the carter administration, long gas lines? The former president talks about a potential energy crisis.

Then, the immigration battle and its impact on the political power of Hispanic Americans. The Los Angeles mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa joins us live with his perspective on that and more.

Plus, in case you missed it, "Late Edition's" highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States. "Late Edition" continues right after this.

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting from Los Angeles. We return now to my interview with former President Jimmy Carter.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Let's talk a little bit about human rights in the West Bank, in Gaza, the Palestinian/Israeli problem, which is clearly very much on your agenda right now. You say the elections were very free, very fair, the elections that saw Hamas win and become the leader of this new Palestinian government. Listen to what Olmert, Ehud Olmert, the prime minister, said this week at the White House about this new Hamas-led Palestinian government.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

EHUD OLMERT, ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER: Unfortunately, the rise of Hamas, a terrorist organization which refuses to recognize Israel's right to exist and regards terrorism as a legitimate tool, severely undermines the possibility of promoting a genuine peace process.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Is the peace process effectively dead right now?

CARTER: Well, it depends on a judgment to be made by Israel and the Palestinians, and with a heavy influence from Washington. There is now a very clearly identified interlocutor, or a negotiator, who represents the Palestinian community from two points of view. One is the president of the Palestine National Assembly, and that is Mahmoud Abbas.

And the other point of view is the leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, the PLO. And that is the same person, Mahmoud Abbas. And so he has been going around national capitals in Europe and other places during the last few months, strongly calling for direct talks between himself and representatives of the Israeli government.

And there have been statements made even by Hamas leaders that they favor these direct talks between Abbas and representatives from Israel. So the problem ...
BLITZER: ... Mr. President, excuse me for interrupting you, but Olmert says that he's powerless, he's helpless, he respects him, he thinks he's a good man. But he really has no longer authority to deliver anything.

CARTER: Well, I don't want to get into a debate with the prime minister of Israel, whom I respect very much. But the fact is that there are only two positions that are distinct positions of authority. One is the head of the Palestinian government and the other one is the head of the Palestinian liberation organization. And the PLO is the only organization, as you know, that the government of Israel recognizes.

So Abbas can't speak for the Palestinian community officially. He's also been the one in the past, as you know, that was endorsed by the United States government under President Bush and by the Israel government under the former prime minister of Israel, Sharon.

So if there is a desire to have peace talks, obviously the Palestinians have a representative who can speak for the Palestinian people.

BLITZER: Israel is saying -- the government of Israel, that if there are no negotiations, Israel will take unilateral action to disengage, as it calls it, from the West Bank, at least from parts of the West Bank. I know you've written an article suggesting that would be an illegal land grab, words to that effect, what you said. I asked Olmert about your article on "Late Edition" last Sunday. Here's what he said about your comment. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

OLMERT: I have enormous respect for President Carter, who comes to visit me every now and then. When he's in Israel, I think some of his statements are different than the ones that he writes when he's far away. But I think that the basic point is this: Shall we negotiate with the terrorist government? I don't know that there is one serious American representative that will advise Israel to sit with a terrorist government and negotiate with them.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Do you want to comment on that?

CARTER: I think I just have, Wolf. I'm not advocating that Prime Minister Olmert negotiate with the Hamas organization. I'm advocating that they negotiate with Mahmoud Abbas, who is the president of the Palestinian Organization, the government, and also the head of the PLO.

I haven't advocated that assistance of an economic character be given to the Hamas government. What I've advocated is that humanitarian assistance only be given directly to the people in the West Bank and Gaza through the United Nations agencies, perhaps, through the United Nations High Commission on Refugees, through UNICEF and other organizations, bypassing the Hamas government. So there's a difference between Hamas on the one hand, with whom Israel will not negotiate and which the United States cannot recognize, and the Palestinian people on the other and their own chosen president and the leader of the PLO, Mahmoud Abbas.

BLITZER: We're almost completely out of time, Mr. President, but I was going through some research the other day, and I went back to your State of the Union address in 1980 and found this passage. And I want to play a clip for you from what you said, what, some 26 years ago. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

CARTER: Our excessive dependence on foreign oil is a clear and present danger to our nation's security. (Applause). The need has never been more urgent. At long last, we must have a clear, comprehensive energy policy for the United States.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: But 26 years later you could say -- the current president could say exactly the same thing. What has gone wrong? Why has this country failed over these past 26 years to come up with a clear, comprehensive energy policy that will reduce what you call our excessive dependence on foreign oil?

CARTER: Wolf, during my four years in office, this was always a top priority, and we were able to reduce dramatically the U.S. dependence on foreign oil by increasing production in this country and other means, and primarily by conservation. We started out with 12 million barrels a day being imported. We reduced it down to four million barrels over a long period of time.

Now it's back up to 12 million barrels a day. And this is increasingly making our own country dependent upon and almost forced to collaborate with regimes that would not otherwise be acceptable. And I think it puts the security of our own country in danger, as I said, as you say, 25 years ago.

So, a heavy emphasis on conservation, which I pursued when I was president, would be the first major step, and that's a main step so far that has not yet been taken in recent years.

BLITZER: We have to leave it right there, Mr. President. I want to leave it on a happy note. This week you and your former vice president, Walter Mondale, became the longest living ex-president and ex-vice president in American history, beating Adams and Jefferson. Congratulations to you on that. We hope both of you are around for many, many more years to come. Thanks for all your good work.

CARTER: Thank you, Wolf. All you have to do is live a long life and chose a healthy vice president.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And coming up, do calls for the United States to make English its national language or official language have racial overtones? We'll talk about that and more with the mayor of Los Angeles, Antonio Villaraigosa. He's standing by live.

Up next, though, we'll get a quick check of what's in the news right now, including the latest on that devastating earthquake in Indonesia. Stay with "Late Edition."

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: You can't secure our border with thousands trying to sneak in. And therefore, this country needs a temporary worker program that will allow foreign workers to enter our country legally.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: President Bush, renewing his call for an overhaul of U.S. immigration laws. Welcome back to "Late Edition." We're reporting from Los Angeles.

And joining us, now, is the city's mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa. He made history last year by becoming the first elected Hispanic mayor of L.A.

Mr. Mayor, good to be in your beautiful city.

MAYOR ANTONIO VILLARAIGOSA (D), LOS ANGELES: Good to be here with you. Welcome to Los Angeles.

BLITZER: Thank you very much. Lots to talk about. Let's get to the Senate. The U.S. Senate, back in Washington, approved immigration reform. It brought together this odd coalition, the president and other Republicans like Bill Frist, the majority leader, John McCain, a lot of Democrats, including Senator Kennedy.

Are you on-board, basically, with what the Senate has approved?

VILLARAIGOSA: I'm on board, basically, with what they've approved. Not all of it is...

BLITZER: What don't you like?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, I think the amendment that deals with English as a national language was unnecessary. We already know it's the language of commerce and success.

You and I are speaking English now. They didn't allocate money so people can learn English. I can tell you that, here in Los Angeles, there are lines, thousands of people waiting to learn English in our adult schools.

BLITZER: Let me read to you what the amendment says, specifically, on English as a national language. It says, "The government of the United States shall preserve and enhance the role of English as the national language of the United States of America. Unless specifically stated in applicable law, no person has a right, entitlement, or claim to have the government of the United States or any of its officials or representatives act, communicate, perform or provide services, or provide materials in any language other than English."

Practically speaking, what does that mean for Los Angeles, in terms of providing services, information, in Spanish?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, what it means is you won't be able to communicate with people for badly needed services. They could be emergency services. They could be services for medical care.

And again, it was one of those things that you see Congress do quite often. It's probably why this Congress and its majority is doing so poorly with the American public right now.

With all of the things they have to do right now, they're going to pass amendments like this.

Having said that, I do support the overall -- this broad immigration reform, comprehensive immigration reform. As you said, it was a coalition put together. And I do support it.

BLITZER: The Senate version does have immigration reform, a guest worker provision, a path towards citizenship for 11 million or 12 million, at least a lot of illegal immigrants, right now.

And it has a border security aspect. The House, which already passed immigration reform, basically deals almost exclusively with the issue of border security and enforcement, doesn't deal with other issues.

The chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner, said this on Friday. Listen to what he said.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

REP. JAMES SENSENBRENNER, HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE CHAIR: I can't predict how anything is going to play out in the conference.

Let me say that amnesty is wrong because amnesty rewards someone for illegal behavior. And the system that has been set up in the Senate will also result in gross document fraud.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: What he's referring to is that, if an illegal immigrant has been here for five years or longer, they would be eligible toward this path toward citizenship.

And what critics are suggesting is there's going to be widespread fraud. Even those who have been here a few months or only a few years, they'll be able to prove they've been here for five years or longer.

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, actually, Mr. Sensenbrenner agrees with many of the proponents of the Senate version of this immigration reform. And that is that amnesty is not what we're talking about here. Nobody is talking about amnesty.

There will be a fine, a $1,000 fine on the front-end and a $1,000 fine on the back-end. You don't automatically become a citizen in this country. You've got to earn citizenship and this proposal allows for that.

It does not provide for amnesty in the way that he has said. And so maybe there is an opportunity for us to come together, because nobody is proposing amnesty at this time.

BLITZER: What they are saying, the critics, as you know, that's basically, a slap on the wrist. Those aren't serious issues, $1,000 here, $1,000 there. People will be able to come up with that money and become citizens.

VILLARAIGOSA: When you're making minimum wage and less, coming up with $2,000 is a lot of money. I can tell you that. And what they like to do, look, this is a way for them to create a wedge issue, to polarize the nation. Leaders are supposed to bring people together. This immigration proposal, as proposed by the Senate, is a middle ground, make no mistake about it. The Sensenbrenner proposals which would make 12 million people felons is not a middle ground. It's an extreme position.

BLITZER: Your friend, the governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, originally said he didn't like the idea of dispatching National Guard troops to the border with Mexico. He's reluctantly come around to a -- listen to what he said on Wednesday, when he was meeting with the Mexican president, Vicente Fox.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER, GOVERNOR OF CALIFORNIA: I oppose the using of military for law-enforcement duties. However, I am prepared to commit the California National Guard troops in support of border-patrol operations. But as I said, it has to be on a temporary basis.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: You agree with him on that?

VILLARAIGOSA: Absolutely. And I'll say this. I think our National Guard is already stretched too thin. I don't think it's an appropriate use of the National Guard. As I said on your show a couple of weeks ago, the Bush administration was authorized 10,000 positions for border-patrol agents. They've only filled 250. They need to get on the job of providing the border security the people want.

A lot of people recognized there are homeland security aspects hovering over this immigration debate, if terrorists, for example, could simply walk into the United States along the Mexican border. Representative Duncan Hunter, the chairman of the House armed services committee, said this. Listen to what he said.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. REPRESENTATIVE DUNCAN HUNTER, (R-CA): People now understand, if you want to get into the United States illegally, you no longer come through L.A. International Airport. You come across the land border between Mexico and the United States. So there's a dimension of homeland security that's concerned about terrorism that needs to be focused on this. And this no longer is simply an immigration issue. It's a security issue.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: How worried are you, Mr. Mayor, that terrorists will come into the United States from Mexico along the border with California?

VILLARAIGOSA: I'm more worried about terrorists exposing our ports and our airports. And this is a Congress that spent a lot of time about Dubai and all of that, and has failed to give us the resources we need here in Los Angeles and across the country to protect our ports and our airports. They do a lot of talking. They like demagoguing on these issues. And then they don't provide you with the money that you need, as first responders.

I'm the mayor of Los Angeles, and I have a responsibility. I just don't talk about this issue of homeland security. I have the responsibilities the leader of the city to provide the resources, to protect the citizenry. And the federal government has failed. And the Congress has failed. What they do is spend a lot of time on that kind of rhetoric and then not give us the resources we need to protect our cities.

BLITZER: One of the key issues you're dealing with here is education in Los Angeles. And I think it's fair to say, you will acknowledge this city's education system has failed. You recently issued a document, you pointed out that 81 percent of the middle-school students here in L.A. attend failing schools. Eighth graders in L.A. lag two years behind their peers in New York City.

A Harvard University study found that nearly half of the African American and Latino students failed to graduate in four years. You want to revolutionize the education system here and take control from the Board of Education, which is running into a lot of opposition. But you feel strongly on this.

VILLARAIGOSA: Actually, I think this issue of education in our urban schools across the nation, not just here in Los Angeles, is a national security issue. When you look at the fact that too many of our kids can't read and write when they graduate, they can't pass a high-school exit exam that tests you at the eighth-grade level, half of our kids are dropping out, there's no accountability in our schools, we're $27 million under-funded in the Leave No Child Behind Act, 44th in per-pupil spending here in Los Angeles, once again, it's another case of the lack of accountability and responsibility. A lot of talk about what we can and should do. And not enough doing. And so what I've said is, like New York, Chicago, Boston, and Cleveland, the mayor needs to ultimately oversee our public schools so that we can reduce...

BLITZER: Who is fighting you on this?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, primarily, a group of stakeholders. Right now, it's the teacher's union, even though I've been very, very supportive of the fact we need to empower teachers, empower parents. I want to see parent compacts, student accountability, in terms of uniforms, in terms of more discipline in our schools. We want to give teacher training, focus on principals getting more collaborative in their decisionmaking. Decisions made at the local school site...

BLITZER: Governor Schwarzenegger supports you on this?

VILLARAIGOSA: He is supportive, and so is the leader of the California state assembly, Fabian Nunez, the speaker. And the pro tem.

BLITZER: A lot of people are pointing to this alliance, if you will, this odd couple, Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and Arnold Schwarzenegger, the governor. What's the story here? Are the two of you political allies right now? Because he's facing a tough re-election. A lot of Democrats would like to become -- would like to see a Democrat take charge.

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, look, I am a Democrat. But I also have a responsibility as the mayor of this city to work with the governor, whoever that is. Just as I have to work with the president of the United States, who's been duly elected. I don't have to have voted for that person. I do have to work with him. Both of us agree the situation around the schools is something that we need to get a handle of -- on, rather. It's unacceptable that the schools aren't working in the way that they should.

We think we can work together on that. We also worked very closely together on the infrastructure bond to provide more money for goods and transportation, for goods movement, for the infrastructure needs of Los Angeles and the state, so...

BLITZER: Are you going to vote for Arnold Schwarzenegger?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, we're going to work with him all the way to the election?

BLITZER: Well, you're leaving open the door. You might vote for him.

VILLARAIGOSA: No. I'm a Democrat, and the governor knows that I support whoever the Democratic nominee is going to be. But right now, I'm going to focus on the work that he and I can do together. He's a good man. We've been able to develop a good friendship. That benefits the city of Los Angeles and the state of California. BLITZER: Well, you've got a tough agenda out here, tough problems. Mr. Mayor, thanks for the hospitality. Thanks for coming in this Memorial Day weekend.

VILLARAIGOSA: Spend your money here in Los Angeles.

BLITZER: We're spending some money here. Thank you. And coming up, in case you missed it, our highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States. Stay with us.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Danica Patrick. What's her story?

(voice over): The 24-year-old race car driver will be behind the wheel today, trying to become the first female to win the Indianapolis 500.

In 2005, Patrick was voted the Indy Racing League's "rookie of the year," winning $1 million. She also finished fourth in last year's Indy 500, the best performance by a woman in the 90-year-old race's history.

Although she has yet to win a race in 19 starts, Patrick is a fan favorite and says she more than welcomes the challenge of succeeding in a male-dominated sport.

BLITZER: And now, in case you missed it, let's check some of the highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States.

On "Fox News Sunday," Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist discussed the immigration bill just approved by the Senate.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. BILL FRIST, REPUBLICAN MAJORITY LEADER: It's not necessarily politically popular. It's certainly not easy, as we've seen on the floor.

But I can tell you the bill that came off the Senate floor, not perfect -- I don't agree with everything in that bill -- does reflect the overall will of the Senate.

It's a first step. We're going to go to confidence. The president, obviously, is going to get very involved. And with that, we'll be able to address what is a national security, economic and humanitarian issue.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: On NBC's "Meet the Press," the Republican chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner, explained why he opposes the Senate bill.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SENSENBRENNER: I want to solve the problem. The American people want this problem solved. But this time, we've got to do it right.

And to do it right means to do things in the proper order. The secret is, first secure the border and enforce the employer sanctions law. If we don't do both of those things, then we will simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border and taking jobs.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: On CBS's "Face the Nation," the Senate majority whip, Mitch McConnell and Democratic senator, Chuck Schumer, sparred over which party has the upper hand, heading into the November congressional elections.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. MITCH MCCONNELL (R) KY: Americans have forgotten what they do when they're in the majority. I can tell you what they'll do. They'll wave the white flag in the war on terror. They'll raise taxes. And they'll try to censure the president in the Senate and impeach the president in the House. This is what their agenda really is.

SEN. CHARLES SCHUMER (D) NY: The Republican party, whether it's the president or the Senate leadership, doesn't have anything to say other than these, sort of, fear tactics aimed at Democrats. Now, it's not going to work.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Those are some of the other highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States.

Our "Late Edition" Web question asks this: "Do you agree with the Senate measure making English the national language of the United States?" Here's the results of how you voted?

Look at this: 82 percent of you said yes; 18 percent said no. Remember, though, this is not, I repeat, not, a scientific poll.

Let's take a look at what's on the cover of this week's major news magazines here in the United States.

U.S. News and World Report, has "Global warming: Can We Live With It?"

Time Magazine features "Congo: The Hidden Toll of the World's Deadliest War."

And Newsweek Magazine is "Rethinking 'The Marriage Crunch.'"

Those are the covers of the major newsmagazines here in the United States.

Let's get a few of your e-mails. Edward from Franklin, Connecticut writes this: "Immigration reform should include community or military service for all illegal aliens if they want U.S. citizenship; they could help with rebuilding the hurricane-affected areas and building border fences. Most Americans believe that the American dreams should not be free for those who are here illegally; make them earn it."

Darrell from Lake Worth, Florida writes: "This immigration bill that passed is amnesty, no matter what the inept politicians say. The real problem is that these big employers are exploiting Mexicans with cheaper wages, thus driving down American's wages. The solution is to make these employers pay the legal minimum wages.

We always welcome your comments here on "Late Edition." And that's your "Late Edition" for this Sunday. I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting from Los Angeles. See you during the week.

NBC – MEET THE PRESS

MR. TIM RUSSERT: Our issues this Sunday: Can the Senate and the House agree on a comprehensive reform of immigration? Was the FBI raid on a congressional office a breach of the constitutional separation of powers? With us: the senior senator from Nebraska, Chuck Hagel; and the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner of Wisconsin.

Then, President Bush admits missteps in the Iraq war.

(Videotape, May 25, 2006):

PRES. GEORGE W. BUSH: Saying, "Bring it on." Kind of tough talk, you know, that sent the wrong signal to people.

(End videotape)

MR. RUSSERT: And the new Iraqi prime minister in an exclusive NBC News interview.

Insights and analysis from David Broder of The Washington Post, David Ignatius of The Washington Post, Kate O'Beirne of the National Review, and Eugene Robinson of The Washington Post.

And in our MEET THE PRESS MINUTE, we remember former Treasury Secretary and U.S. Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who died this week.

But first, immigration. Can the House, the Senate and the White House find common ground? We are joined by Congressman James Sensenbrenner, Senator Chuck Hagel.

SEN. CHUCK HAGEL (R-NE): Hi.

MR. RUSSERT: Welcome both.

Let's put this issue in context for our viewers, and read a summary of the bill that was just passed by the Senate. Here we go. "Border security would get a boost, with 14,000 Border Patrol agents added ... over the next five years. Extra detention facilities would be built to hold the illegal immigrants caught at the border. And the bill authorizes the construction of 370 miles of fencing along the U.S.-Mexico boundary.

"Employers would have to start using an electronic verification system within 18 months to ensure that all new hires are legal. Companies that hired illegal workers would be fined up to $20,000 dollars, and repeat offenders would draw prison terms.

“... The bill creates a three-tiered system to determine the future status of illegal immigrants. Those who arrived in the U.S. in the last two years would be required to leave. Those in the country more than two years but less than five years would have to leave the country and get a work visa before reentering, after which they could work toward legal status.

“Those in the U.S. longer than five years could stay and eventually apply for permanent legal status, a step toward citizenship, as long as they paid back taxes and fines of at least $3,250 dollars, continued working, and learned English and U.S. civics.

“A guest worker program would allow foreign workers to enter the country in the future and provide a way for them to gain permanent legal status.

Congressman Sensenbrenner, what is wrong with that legislation?

REP. JAMES SENSENBRENNER (R-WI): Well, it's too much too soon and too expensive. What we have to do is first secure the border, and then we have to turn off the magnet that brings more illegal immigrants into our country. Once we do that and we know it's effective, then we can figure out what to do with the 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants that are already here. I'm afraid that the amnesty—and that's what it is—that's proposed in the Senate bill and the way it's proposed is going to result in huge document fraud just like there was when amnesty was passed 20 years ago in the Simpson-Mazzoli Bill, which failed so miserably that we have a problem that's out of control now.

MR. RUSSERT: What would you do with the 11 million illegal immigrants?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Well, if we have a workable and effective employer sanctions program, then I think a lot of the illegal immigrants would simply go back home because they would no longer be able to work in this country illegally. The problem with the Senate bill is that there is no verification of current illegal immigrant status, so they can keep their jobs forever. The House bill does require current employee Social Security numbers to be verified so that we can squeeze the illegal immigrant employment out of our economy and replace illegal immigrant workers with either citizens or legal immigrants who have green cards.

MR. RUSSERT: As you well know, those 11 million illegal immigrants have about three million children who were born in the U.S., therefore they are U.S. citizens. What would happen to them? Would they go back to the or—the country of origin for the mom and pop? Or would they stay in the U.S.?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: The mom and pop would have to make that determination on their own. We cannot deport U.S. citizens, and I would tell you that it's impractical and probably physically impossible to deport the 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants that are already here. What the Senate does is throw up their hands, say, “Give them amnesty”—they don't call it amnesty—but give them amnesty and allow them to stay. That's not fair because it gives a reward to a lawbreaker, but it also is unfair to people who are standing in queue to become legal immigrants. For example, a legal immigrant from Mexico has to wait 16 years. Under the Senate bill, an illegal immigrant who is a Mexican citizen can get the permanent resident status and a green card in only six years. So sneaking under the fence under the Senate bill jumps you ahead in the line by 10 years.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Hagel, you are the author of that said legislation.

Please respond.

SEN. HAGEL: Well, my friend, Jim Sensenbrenner, has not given all the story here as to what that bill does. Let's start with a couple of the main points. Our bill is 730 pages long. The House bill is 255 pages long. The first half of our bill deals solely with enforcement. You put some of them up on the screen. It goes for hundreds of pages beyond that. So we do enforce the border, and we do things in addition to which you said, 500 miles of vehicle traps and so on. There are 60 subsections in our bill on what we would do with enforcement. In fact, our bill goes further than the House bill in some sections on enforcement.

Now, let's get to the bigger issues after enforcement. In the first half of our bill is enforcement. Nobody questions enforcement. Amnesty, that's nonsense. What Ronald Reagan did in 1986 was amnesty, "Unconditional, all is forgiven." What Jimmy Carter did in 1978 with those who left this country rather than serve the country, "unconditional, all is forgiven." That was amnesty. This is not amnesty, as you've already laid out some of the criteria that those who would qualify would have to go through. Not all of the criteria you laid out.

Let's talk about the workers. For example, in the front page of The New York Times this morning, there's a story about firefighters in the Northwestern part of the United States. It talks about half of the National Forest Service firefighters are immigrants, and probably most of those are illegal immigrants. The fact is, temporary workers—and by the way, the secretary of labor signs off on temporary workers. No temporary workers are allowed in this country unless he signs off or she signs off.

We need to deal with that. We need to deal with the 11 million to 12 million and, as you noted, those children. We can't just defer that. This is not a sequential process. This is a process that must be comprehensive. All the pieces that we have in our bill—and yes, they are debatable and they should be debatable. Yes, they're emotional, but they're all part of what we're trying to do in a wider view, wider sense of what is important to our, our country.

Let me talk about a couple of other things here. He talks about money. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Commission on Taxes both said—both came up with the same number, over the next 10 years the Senate bill would cost about $54 billion dollars. But what you don't hear is they also said that the revenues coming in from that Senate bill would be about $66 billion dollars. So, yes, it's going to take some resources, but actually the Congressional Budget Office says that our bill produces more revenues than it does expenses.

You can't just let dangle out there for our country, for our national security, for our economics, for our fabric, our social fabric, those who are here illegally. They have broken a law, they must be dealt with, and we have a way to, to deal with them. Is it imperfect? Yes, it is. But when you asked the chairman the question, "What are you doing, Mr. Chairman?" he really doesn't have an answer for that. "Well, let's just fix the border first." Well, of course you fix the border first. The problem with 1986 in that, in that bill, yes, it was amnesty. This is not amnesty. Second, we didn't enforce our border. Third, we didn't do anything about worker enforcement. We didn't give any penalties or any structure to those who hire, the employers, their verification, those illegals, and we just let the rest of, of it drift. We have an opportunity now to restructure, recommit ourselves and do it right.

MR. RUSSERT: Congressman Sensenbrenner, when the president of the United States addressed the nation on this subject, you said, quote, "I think he doesn't get it." What doesn't President Bush get?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: President Bush and my, with all due respect, my colleagues in the Senate don't get the fact that Simpson-Mazzoli failed miserably 20 years ago. This bill is a repeat of Simpson-Mazzoli. First, let me say that the convoluted thing that Senator Hagel says is not amnesty really is amnesty, and former Attorney General Ed Meese, who was Reagan's AG at the time, wrote an op-ed piece in The New York Times on Wednesday, said that at least Ronald Reagan was honest in calling it amnesty.

Now, what—the procedure that the Senate has done invites document fraud. That happened in '86 when illegal immigrants who were here for two years could apply for amnesty. Meese said that there was a huge amount of document fraud. The same construct is in the Senate bill. But the Senate also has got a provision in their bill that says that the immigration authorities cannot investigate beyond the piece of paper that the immigrant applies for amnesty on. So if the person lies on that application, there can't be an investigation, and the government employee is subject to criminal investigation and liability if they try to investigate it on their own.

The other thing the Senate bill does, and I think this is really outrageous, is that it gives retroactive Social Security credit to illegal immigrants who are using fraudulent Social Security cards. That's going to be an $80 billion to $100 billion-dollar raid on a Social Security trust fund that we all know isn't very healthy. And what this does is that it rewards the illegal immigrants for the period that they were here illegally, work—and working illegally, not just in letting them stay here, but to dip into a Social Security fund that has got to be restructured if it is to continue to provide the benefits to people who have worked here and paid in all of their lives.

MR. RUSSERT: But isn't it estimated that illegal immigrants have contributed over $400 billion dollars into the Social Security fund?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: And, and illegal immigrants can't get Social Security numbers on their own, so either they contributed with a stolen Social Security number or a fraudulent Social Security number. And the fact of the matter remains is that the entire transaction was fraud and the Senate bill retroactively rewards that fraud. That's not right.

MR. RUSSERT: Go ahead, Senator.

SEN. HAGEL: Well, let me, let me correct the chairman on a couple of points. The Senate bill puts into place a biometric identification card. Every alien, every immigrant worker must have a biometric identification card. That means you can't get a job without it. It's tamper-proof, fraud-resistant. And therefore, that starts to deal with some of the things the chairman's talking about. He inconveniently forgets that.

The fact is, on workers, one of the things that we don't talk much about is that we are essentially at full employment in the country today. Our current unemployment rate in this country today is 4.7 percent. That—any economist will tell you that's almost full employment. The fact is, we have more jobs today than ever in the history of this country, all kinds of new jobs. Our bill deals with these, these worker visas, these temporary worker visas, both low skill and high skill.

One of the things that Europe did wrong in this years and years ago—and France is a good example—when they're not dealing with the things the Senate bill's dealing with, what you do is you perpetuate a, a lower class, a constant, a consistent, a permanent lower class. That's part of the problems that the Europeans are having today. Our bill deals with that. You, you cannot perpetuate that lower class. So all of these things are, are part of what we have to deal with.

And I acknowledge, can we do something better in a conference? I hope so. That's the whole point of a conference. But, but to just walk away from it and say, "Well, we're going to enforce budgets—our borders first, and then maybe we'll get to the rest of it," we fail the American public. We fail those who sent us here not to resolve this problem. And I think the president's right. I think the American people are starting to move in that direction, fix the problem. It will be imperfect.

MR. RUSSERT: What will be the political consequences this fall if a Republican president, a Republican Senate and a Republican House do not come together and find common ground on immigration?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, there will be political consequences. There are political consequences for everything we defer and don't do. We're in the mess that we're in today on this issue is because we've deferred this tough issue. My dear friend Jim Sensenbrenner and those who think like Jim on this, they want to continue to defer it. That's why we have the problem we have. There will be a political consequence for this. That's not why we do it or should fix it, but, but make no mistake, politics is wrapped around everything. Politics is in the fabric of our very processes, as it should be, because politics is about accountability, it's about leadership, it's about courage. This is the test. This is a significant test.

MR. RUSSERT: Bottom line, Congressman Sensenbrenner, will you—will House Republicans accept any path to citizenship for the illegal immigrants now in the U.S.?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Tim, the words "path to citizenship" is a buzz word for amnesty. We ought to be honest. It is amnesty.

But to respond to Senator Hagel, I was in Congress when the Simpson-Mazzoli bill was passed. I voted against it. We have the problem today not because we deferred the problem, it's because Congress made a mistake in passing Simpson-Mazzoli. And those who supported it, including former Senator Simpson, said that the Simpson-Mazzoli bill has given us the difficulty that we're in.

The Senate bill is Simpson-Mazzoli 20 years later. I want to solve the problem. The American people want this problem solved, but this time we've got to do it right. And to do it right means to do things in the proper order. The secret is first, secure the border and enforce the employer sanctions law. If we don't do both of those things, then we will simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border and taking jobs, because it is always cheaper for an illegal immigrant to be hired than either a citizen or a legal immigrant with a green card and work authorization. The market does work, and no bill that we pass, unless it is done right, will be able to rectify the market so that people who are doing these jobs, including Americans and legal immigrants, will be on the books, will be legal, will be paid and will have their Social Security taxes paid under their own Social Security number and their own name. And that's what the priorities of the House are.

I can say that earlier this month Zogby released a poll, and they had a fair question where they asked the American public whether they preferred the Senate or the House approach. The House approach was preferred over the Senate approach by a 64- to 30-percent margin by the American public. I think the House is where the American people are; the Senate has gone way off the page.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me ask my question again: Would you accept any legislation which would put illegal immigrants on a path to citizenship or, as you say, amnesty?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: No. Amnesty is wrong, and even Mexican government officials have said that the talk of amnesty is actually increasing the flow of illegal immigrants across the border as we speak. And they have redeployed some of their security forces into the desert on the Mexican side of the border to prevent Mexicans who are trying to come across the border from either starving or being dehydrated. Amnesty is wrong and we should not pass it.

MR. RUSSERT: Twenty-four percent of the farming industry relies on illegal immigrants; 17 percent of the cleaning industry, 14 percent of the construction industry, 12 percent of the food preparation industry—all illegal immigrants. What happens to those industries if the illegal immigrants are sent home?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: I'm not saying that the illegal immigrants will be sent home, and I think that the end sum game, which I hope Senator Hagel agrees with, is to turn the illegal immigrant work force into a legal work force, whether they're legal immigrants or whether they're United States citizens. Because this problem has festered for such a long period of time, that can't be done with the wave of a wand or the signing of a bill by the president of the United States.

But I get back to the point that unless we do employer sanctions right and do border security right, you'll simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border, and those that are here now might not apply for amnesty or whatever else it's called because they're afraid that they will price themselves out of the market and lose their jobs.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator:

SEN. HAGEL: Jim Sensenbrenner has just described the Senate bill. He has just described why we should pass the Senate bill. Everything he just said, it is right and it is included in the Senate bill. You talk about polls and the American people and where the American people are on this. Isn't it interesting that you have four states that are along that 2,000-mile border with Mexico, four states with eight United States senators. Five of those eight senators, bipartisan, supported the Senate bill.

Now, are they so out of touch with their constituents, five out of eight border state senators supported the Senate bill? I don't think so. I think the American people, as they start to become more aware of what the details are, what the facts are, information, your kinds of programs, Tim, that allow people to understand this, will, as we always do, start to appreciate the fact that you just—you cannot let this continue to drift, that you have to deal with it. And, again, I'm, I'm amused, is the only reaction I can have at Jim and others, they're continuation on amnesty. I mean, this is just not amnesty. But we'll let, we'll let the conference figure this out.

Last point I'd make on this. I don't speak for the Senate, I don't speak for any senator. I've spoken to a number of Jim's colleagues—matter of fact, some leadership colleagues over there. Most of the people, the Republicans on the House side that I've spoken to, including leadership, including the chairman of the Rules committee who is from California, Congressman David Dreier, want to try to find a resolution to this. So what I'm saying is, this is the best opportunity to do that in a conference, and I think we all want that. I know Jim Sensenbrenner wants it. But to, but to say that something's a nonstarter before you go in, you can't do that.

MR. RUSSERT: Would you support legislation, in the final analysis, that did not provide a path for citizenship for the illegal immigrants?

SEN. HAGEL: I think you've got to have some system, Tim, to do this. Now, they could change it, they can tune it up, they can amend it, but you again are deferring the problem. And, as Jim Sensenbrenner said, the failure of the 1986 act was because we didn't deal with that, as well as we didn't deal with other things. We are now dealing with all those pieces in the Senate bill. Doesn't mean it's perfect, doesn't mean it can't be improved. That's why you have the conference.

MR. RUSSERT: Congressman Sensenbrenner, will there be a bill?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: I hope so. I think the American public wants us to have a bill, but it's important to do it right. Twenty years ago we did it wrong, and we're paying the price. I don't think either Senator Hagel or I want our name on a bill that ends up blowing up in the face of the United States 20 years from now like Simpson-Mazzoli did.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to another subject. You issued a press release saying that you're going to have a hearing entitled "Reckless Justice: Did the Saturday Night Raid of Congress Trample the Constitution?" The FBI raiding the office of Congressman William Jefferson, a Democrat, with a court-approved search warrant, in their investigation of potential bribery. Why are you so upset?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: The Constitution has given Congress immunity for certain transactions, but the court has very clearly said that no corrupt member of Congress can hide behind the speech or debate clause of the US Constitution to shield criminal activity. The FBI has been able to convict corrupt congresspeople in the ABSCAM and in the House bank scandal without this kind of a raid. The executive branch has got immunity under executive privilege as well. And I don't think that it would be right for a House committee to issue a subpoena to the president's office and send the Capitol Police rummaging through files, taking everything, and then deciding what wasn't relevant by themselves and returning it to the president. And that's what the Capitol—or what the FBI did in Congressman Jefferson's office two weeks ago.

Separation of powers and checks and balances is very important, but I want to emphasize and reemphasize that this debate is not over whether Congressman Jefferson is guilty of a criminal offense. He cannot use the constitutional immunity of Congress to shield himself from that or any evidence of that. But it is about the ability of the Congress to be able to do its job free of coercion from the executive branch, and this is something that's worked very well for 219 years, and I think if it's done right, it will continue to work very well for the next 219 years.

MR. RUSSERT: When Speaker Hastert spoke out like you have against this raid, he said information was leaked about him and being involved in his own investigation against him in order to intimidate him. What do you know about that?

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Well, the Justice Department twice denied that Speaker Hastert is under investigation. One of your competing—competing news channels after that denial by the Justice Department republished the fact that the Justice Department allegedly was investigating Speaker Hastert. There was a second denial. I think that news media people have a justifiable cynicism of those of us who serve in public office, but believe me, after the department denied that the speaker is under investigation, for them to turn around and put it up on the air again kind of makes those of us who are in the cross hairs because we happen to be elected a little cynical of what some people in the news media do. Fortunately, that's not you, Tim.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Hagel, are you upset at the fact that the FBI raided the office of a congressman with a subpoena, court-ordered, because he is the subject of a criminal investigation?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, first, we all need to reaffirm that no individual is above the law. Whether it's a congressman, a senator, certainly a president. But some of the points that Jim Sensenbrenner brings out are important. I don't know the facts here, so I'm a little out of my depth. But what I do know, I think this was handled a little awkwardly. I think the president is right in pulling this back a little bit. He is, as you know, put a freeze on this and they will not make a decision for 45 days. We can work our way through this, but you've got a number of factors involved. Not only the ones that the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee mentioned, but you've got also atmospherics here and, and a very testy relationship that's going beyond just what, what this issue is about. So we need to just work it through.

MR. RUSSERT: You mean Republicans are fed up with the Bush White House?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, there, there are lot of issues here. And I would go back more specifically not to political issues, but NSA for example, using new technologies to monitor and inventory calls. This is, this is the point I'm making. It's a universe of bigger issues than, than just this. And this environment, now, is widened and deepened by this one last issue and, and yes there is.

MR. RUSSERT: Is there anger amongst Congressional Republicans with the White House?

SEN. HAGEL: Well, I think there's an issue of—and there's always a tension usually.

MR. RUSSERT: Frustration?

SEN. HAGEL: There's some frustration. Sure, there is. And I think that you're seeing that played out on both sides.

MR. RUSSERT: You said last week the president should negotiate directly with Iran. Why?

SEN. HAGEL: I said he should engage directly with Iran. I don't see, first of all, how you're going to get to the core, to the central issues on the differences, significant differences, between Iran and the United States without that direct engagement. How are things getting better? Are things getting better at the United Nations? Are we enlisting more support for our cause? Are things getting better in the Middle East? I think you could make a pretty strong case that things are worse off in the Middle East today than they were three years ago, by measurement of Iraq, by Iran, by the Palestinian/Israeli issue, what's going on in Egypt.

And I think the United States must use its force of diplomacy to engage Iran. Eventually you're going to have to do that. It is bigger than just the nuclear issue. We're talking about Israel, Iraq, oil, economy. Iran is a large country. It's a powerful country. It's a country of a 5,000 year history. That's diplomacy, that's the hard work of diplomacy. Eventually, we're going to have to do it, we should do it, we should take the leadership.

MR. RUSSERT: Senator Chuck Hagel, Congressman James Sensenbrenner, we thank you both very much for your views.

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Thank you.

SEN. HAGEL: Thank you.

MR. RUSSERT: And we'll be watching this conference committee discussion about immigration.

REP. SENSENBRENNER: Thank you.

MR. RUSSERT: Coming next, our political roundtable. Immigration and the Iraq war, how will they affect the midterm elections November 2006? Our political roundtable is next right here on MEET THE PRESS.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: Our political roundtable—David Broder, David Ignatius, Kate O'Beirne, and the one and the great Mr. Robinson of The Washington Post—after this station break.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: Welcome, all.

David Broder, here's the front page of your paper today. "Republican House members facing the toughest races this fall are overwhelmingly opposed to any deal that provides illegal immigrants a path to citizenship—an election-year dynamic that significantly dims the prospects that President Bush will win the immigration compromise he is seeking ... The opposition spreads across the geographical and ideological boundaries that often divide House Republicans. ... Moderates such as Christopher Shays in suburban Connecticut and Steve Chabot in Cincinnati [and] conservative J.D. Hayworth in Arizona said they are adamant that Congress not take any action that might be perceived as rewarding illegal behavior." Where are we?

MR. DAVID BRODER: The House is convinced—the Republicans in the House are convinced that the public is with them, as you heard Mr. Sensenbrenner say. I think it's going to be a very difficult negotiation, and I think, for many of those Republicans, they'd rather have no bill than a bill that they can't justify to their constituents.

MR. RUSSERT: Kate O'Beirne, the speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert, has said, "I will not put forward any legislation that does not have the support of the majority of the Republicans." Even if he has every Democrat and 49 percent of the Republicans, a majority in the House, he won't move the legislation. Is that right?

MS. KATE O'BEIRNE: Right. That, that's been a long-standing pledge of his, not too much unlike the Democrats who were running Congress before the Republicans took over. Let's not forget, most of the items on the Contract with America were items that Republicans in the House couldn't get a vote on on the floor. So it, it is a difference between the House and Senate.

Senator Frist, of course, didn't get a majority of his Republicans for the bill the Senate just passed out. He had no alternative, because his option was no bill, because he needs 60 votes to get something out of the Senate. But a majority of the Senate Republicans wind—wound up seeming to agree with the majority of the House Republicans, so it sort of puts George Bush with congressional Democrats on the issue of immigration.

MR. RUSSERT: Gene Robinson, how about this? You see George Bush closer to John McCain and Ted Kennedy than he is to House Republicans. What happens politically if a Republican president, Republican House, Republican Senate cannot agree on an immigration bill?

MR. EUGENE ROBINSON: Well, I think politically it's damaging. It makes it—this whole issue has been raised, it's, it's topic A. If they get nothing done on it, I think it's harmful to the Republican Party. It may be a good thing for the country if they don't get anything done, because the House approach, I think, really ignores the fact that there are 11 million to 12 million illegal immigrants here who can't be rounded up and deported overnight, or, or whatever. The president's bill, and the president's approach and the Senate approach—very complicated, hard to sell—might make more sense as public policy, I think, but harder to sell.

MR. RUSSERT: David:

MR. DAVID IGNATIUS: Well, you know, I—listening to the debate between, between, between Sensenbrenner and Hagel, I, I kept thinking this is a wedge issue for Republicans. And Republicans are really angry at each other. And, you know, I think this may be a moment where, if they're unable to come to a compromise on final legislation—you'd certainly have to say that after, after watching this debate and hearing what's going on, that may be a good thing, that the country really isn't quite yet at the point where there is a clear path that everybody will feel comfortable about going forward that will legalize this very difficult problem of immigration. We're just not there yet.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Well...

MR. RUSSERT: Go ahead.

MS. O'BEIRNE: What the House is going to argue, I think, is—what they are arguing is we wouldn't have the 11 million to 12 million illegals here had we not done what we did in 1986, which was, of course, legalize three million illegals and promise to enforce the border and interior enforcement, and not do so. So I think what the House is going to be arguing is for an incremental approach. We do know 80 percent of the public wants the border enforced, they want to stop the hundreds of thousands coming over, and they support workplace sanctions. They think you shouldn't be able to hire illegals. So they're with the public on the enforcement side, and they'll talk incremental.

Once we have that in place, then we can adopt—and I think there's more support among House Republicans than people think for a guest worker program. They are hearing from employers back home. But they want to make sure that it's going to be orderly, not make the mistakes in '86, and it would be unworkable if we don't get the enforcement and workplace stuff right.

MR. IGNATIUS: You know, Sensenbrenner talked about turning off the magnet that's drawing illegal immigrants. I'm sorry, the magnet is the U.S. economy.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Right.

MR. IGNATIUS: And you can't turn that off.

MR. ROBINSON: And the border is not easily sealed.

MS. O'BEIRNE: Right.

MR. ROBINSON: It is not easily sealed. Go down there, you'll see.

MR. RUSSERT: David Broder, the president of the United States, 35 percent approval rating, has talked about this issue, immigration, passionately for a long time. What does he now do if he moves forward on the path to citizenship—or amnesty, as Congressman Sensenbrenner referred to it? Does he further antagonize his political base and risk going down in the polls, or will a success on the issue help him with moderate or swing voters?

MR. BRODER: Well, a success would certainly help him. He has not had a win in Congress for much too long politically. So he's better off if he can get a bill. But there's no question that he's going to pay a price for challenging the core of the Republican Party on, on this issue.

I have to say, I think the president is committed. I think his gut and his heart is in this issue, and he is prepared, I think, to fight on this issue.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to the issue of the FBI raid on the office of Congressman William and—Jefferson, denounced in an interesting bipartisan letter by Dennis Hastert and Nancy Pelosi, the first I've seen in a long time.

Kate O'Beirne, your National Review editorial this week is quite strong on this subject. Let me read it. "House Speaker Dennis Hastert, Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, and Majority Leader John Boehner led a chorus of disgruntled legislators in crying foul, closing ranks around an apparent felon and raving incoherently about a supposed separation-of-powers violation.

"This incredibly tin-eared performance was based on an extravagant construction of the Constitution's speech-and-debate clause (Article 1, Section 6). Congress evidently reads this clause as giving its office space blanket immunity from any investigation by the executive branch - even with court authorization - in connection with any crime, no matter how heinous.

"This is delusional. Congress had a chance to come out swinging against corruption - to demonstrate, amid a slew of tawdry scandals, its recognition that public officials are subject to the same laws as ordinary citizens. The Republican leadership in particular should have seen an opportunity to redirect attention from its caucus's lapses to a Democrat's crude criminality. They chose, instead, to rally around an apparent swindler." Wow.

MS. O'BEIRNE: The, the broad constitutional claim I think is awfully shaky. In fact, as you watch this during the course of this week, it's not a claim that the congressional leaders are making. They do allow that no member should be able to hide in secret in his office, away from law enforcement officials, evidence of criminal behavior.

But just because the Justice Department has a legal right under a, under a legal search warrant, doesn't mean they should either do it or that they did it in the right way. There actually are legitimate separation of powers arguments, I think. And, in fact, the legislative branch is susceptible to being intimidated by the executive branch. The members had no interest in appearing to be defending an accused felon in their midst. They knew the public relations was terrible on the objections they raised, but they felt so strongly about the principle of it. And members who are uneasy about the public relations of seeming to be protecting an accused felon in their midst really reacted so negatively to a leak from the Justice Department against Speaker Hastert a couple of days later, falsely claiming that he was the target of an investigation, part of the Abramoff scandal, that they really rallied to the speaker on those grounds. And it was reminded to them that the same people capable of leaking in retaliation are rummaging through congressional offices.

MR. RUSSERT: How much anger, frustration is there amongst House, Senate Republicans with the Bush White house?

MS. O'BEIRNE: There's a backdrop of frustration. So some saw this as maybe the latest example of showing a lack of regard for legislative prerogatives. I mean, it is an administration that has jealously guarded its own prerogatives, it's own executive privileges. You think they would have been more sensitive to a co-equal branch's view of its prerogatives.

MR. RUSSERT: Gene Robinson, I can hear people, watch people all across the country saying, "You know, the guy is under investigation for taking money. Why not go into his office?"

MR. ROBINSON: Well, you know, the Justice Department seems to feel equally strongly about that what they did was right. The question I had initially was, if you got the money in Bill Jefferson's freezer and you got the alleged bribe on videotape, why do you need to go into his office?

MS. O'BEIRNE: What do you need?

MR. ROBINSON: What do you need? Well, you know, it turns out that there are other instances, there are other possible crimes they want to look into. But also, remember the Abramoff investigation is ongoing. It seems to me that, in a sense, the Justice Department was kind of putting down a marker and saying, you know, "We're going to be looking at a number of people up here, and we're going to go in when we need to go in, and you can't just hide stuff in the corner in your office and expect that, that it will never come to light."

MR. BRODER: I talked to a former member of Congress, a very good lawyer, last night because I was confused by this, by this issue. He said he thinks that the law is probably on the side of the Justice Department, but that it's not a very clearly defined area of law. And he said institutionally he's glad that the Congress is challenging it because this may get it to the Supreme Court and get a definitive ruling about under what circumstances and under what limits can an executive branch agency go in to the congressional office, because there truly is an important principle of the separation of powers that's at stake here.

MR. RUSSERT: Let me turn to the president. Back in April of '04, David Ignatius, he was asked about his biggest mistake, and he said that he really couldn't respond at that moment, he couldn't think of one, and, and he wishes he had more time to prepare for that kind of question. Then, this week he was asked about his biggest mistake with, with Iraq, and without hesitancy, he said, "I shouldn't have said 'Bring it on.' I shouldn't have said, 'We're going to get them, alive or dead,' and the Abu Ghraib prison scandal was a huge problem." Are we seeing a president who's been chastened by Iraq, more introspective about Iraq? What?

MR. IGNATIUS: Well, I thought there was some of both. It was, it was, it was telling, two years on that the president looks back and he's willing to talk, finally, about, about mistakes. In this case, they were mistakes of language. You can say, you know, Abu Ghraib was a mistake, but, frankly, you know, the administration's response still has not been a vigorous one in terms of holding people account for what happened at, at Abu Ghraib. It's been the, been the military.

You know, I, I thought that, that Tony Blair's response to that question was much more substantive. Tony Blair said the problem was that our deBathification effort was too aggressive, that we, that we toppled the basic foundations of this society and we created a vacuum and we haven't known how to, how to, how to fill it.

But, you know, listening to this discussion of past mistakes, it was a reminder that the past and what you know about it really is not a guide to the future. I mean, the dilemmas going forward in Iraq are as painful today as they, as they were two years ago. Looking at those two men, I thought Tony, Tony Blair looked, looked battered, the British prime minister, Bush less so, but you realized the weight of the decisions they still face.

MR. RUSSERT: Kate O'Beirne, we still have a situation of 135,000 American men and women on the ground. Will the president be forced to acknowledge more misjudgments about WMD, about troop levels, about insurrection in order to maintain public support for the war amongst Democrats, conservatives, liberals, Republicans, mainliners, moderates, whatever you want to call them?

MS. O'BEIRNE: I think there's a recognition at the White House, Tim, that being candid about mistakes in the past appears to be more realistic. People maybe are more open to listening to your assessment of how things are going now if they, if they see that sort of sense of being realistic.

I thought it was notable during the press conference with Tony Blair that, rather than talk about all the possibilities with this new government or how many Iraqi forces are now standing up, Tony Blair was emphasizing the course of not winning in Iraq. And I, I think that the public is more open to hearing that than updates on progress on the ground when they don't see a concrete progress—meaning, it seems to me, withdrawing troops, or at least a scheduled withdrawal of troops, capturing Zarqawi. In the absence of that kind of concrete evidence, I don't think the public is open to assessments week by week that they have no way of judging. I think there's just more candor involved when, in lieu of that, you're admitting past mistakes and reminding people of the course of failure and how resolute the enemy is. And I thought Tony Blair and the president both made clear we've got to be equally resolute. I think the public's more receptive to that.

MR. RUSSERT: Eugene:

MR. ROBINSON: You know, the, the difference in tone is really amazing when, when you go from "Mission accomplished" and "Bring it on" to, to the way the president sounds now. And if you put this together with, with other things he said recently, it all seems to be an acknowledgment that, you know, not only is Iraq not the, the Athenian democracy it was supposed to be, but, in fact, this is going to be a messy situation for a long time beyond his term in office. There's no easy resolution, there's no easy answer. And there's a—he seems to be looking ahead, you know, toward the verdict of history.

MR. RUSSERT: Enter Iran. The new Prime Minister Maliki sat down with Richard Engel this week, of NBC News, and said, "Iraq will not be used as a base for any military operations against Iran." That is not what we're here for.

David Ignatius, you wrote an interesting column where you said, and I'll read it, "Amid all the debate about intelligence, there has been surprisingly little focus on the question the average citizen (and average policymaker, too) would probably have at the top of the list: Will these guys get it wrong again? Will they tell the world that something is a 'slam-dunk,' only to discover later that it didn't exist? ...

"So how can [Director of National Intelligence John] Negroponte ... be sure the analysts are getting it right this time on Iran? How can they remake the analysts' world so that their human judgment is again 'the intelligence device supreme,' in the words of their patron saint, Sherman Kent, who headed CIA analysis during the Cold War?" Big challenge. Will the world, will the country listen to an American president saying, "Iran is dangerous. We must do something"?

MR. IGNATIUS: Well, that's obviously the biggest nightmare that anyone in the intelligence community could have, that the country will so fundamentally have lost trust in their judgments that when they warn of, of a real crisis, they won't be believed. We have a new CIA director, Michael Hayden, who was confirmed this week, who's going after the agency with a mission of restoring morale, of trying to do analysis in a different way, much more careful look at sourcing, much more transparency so that analysts know who these sources, who typically have been hidden from their view, are. Much more competition and really argument about, about hypotheses for what's going on. So they're going at Iran in a, in a different way.

On the Maliki comments about Iran, where he says, "We will not allow Iraq to be used as a base for attacks on Iran," you know, obviously that, that would worry Americans who'd hoped that Iraq would be an aircraft carrier for us in the Middle East. But, you know, this is an assertion of Iraqi sovereignty and independence, and that should not frighten Americans. Quite the opposite, that's actually good news.

MR. RUSSERT: We have 20 seconds, David. Senator Hagel calling on the president to negotiate directly with the Iranians.

MR. BRODER: I think that's questionable, because we have committed to the Europeans that we would work with them. For us to go off on our own now would leave them in a—wondering can the Americans keep their own commitments to us?

MR. RUSSERT: To be continued. David Broder, David Ignatius, Gene Robinson, Kate O'Beirne, thanks very much.

Coming next, our MEET THE PRESS MINUTE with former vice presidential candidate, treasury secretary and U.S. senator from Texas, the late Lloyd Bentsen.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: And we are back. Former U.S. senator of Texas, Democratic vice presidential candidate, and Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen died this week at the age of 85. During his long career, he appeared on MEET THE PRESS 18 times. This 1994 appearance with NRA chief Wayne LaPierre stands out for what Mr. Bentsen brought to the MEET THE PRESS table. Let's watch.

(Videotape, May 1, 1994):

MR. RUSSERT: We're back with the secretary of the treasury, Lloyd Bentsen.

Mr. Secretary, you heard Mr. LaPierre's challenge. Will you go to the range on Wednesday and experiment with his guns?

SEC'Y LLOYD BENTSEN: I tell you, that's funny, because I went to the range this last week and fired some of those guns. Let me give you an example. When I heard him say that these were not used in crime, that's a street sweeper, 156 instances in the last three years this gun involved in crime.

And I was amused to hear that I'm not supposed to know anything about the guns. I've had guns all my life. I qualified as an expert on the range in the military. I went to the front lines and fired guns in World War II. I fired .50-calibers. In addition to that, I flew 35 missions over Europe. I'm also a quail hunter. Can you imagine that thing being used in...

MR. RUSSERT: Is that Dan Quayle?

SEC'Y BENTSEN: No, no, no.

(End videotape)

MR. RUSSERT: That reference, of course, to what The Washington Post called "the perfect put-down." Mr. Bentsen's famous exchange with Dan Quayle during the vice presidential debate, October 5, 1988.

(Videotape, October 5, 1988):

SEN. DAN QUAYLE: I have as much experience in the Congress as Jack Kennedy did when he sought the presidency. I will be prepared to deal with the people in the Bush administration if that unfortunate event would ever occur.

MODERATOR: Senator Bentsen:

SEN. LLOYD BENTSEN: Senator, I served with Jack Kennedy, I knew Jack Kennedy.

Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine. Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy.

(End videotape)

MR. RUSSERT: Lloyd Bentsen will be laid to rest this Tuesday in Houston, Texas. He and his family are in our thoughts and prayers.

And we'll be right back.

(Announcements)

MR. RUSSERT: Every American president since John F. Kennedy has been a guest on this program during his political career. Now, you can watch complete episodes of some of the most historic MEET THE PRESS presidential appearances: John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. "Meet the Presidents," and other NBC News programming now available on iTunes. For more information and a preview of what's available, check out our Web site mtp.msnbc.com.

That's all for today. We'll be back next week. If it's Sunday, it's MEET THE PRESS.

And this weekend we honor all those brave young men and women in Afghanistan, Iraq and around the world, and we remember all those in our nation's history who've paid the ultimate sacrifice so we all could be free.

ABC – THIS WEEK

STEPHANOPOULOS: This week -- President Bush admits mistakes in Iraq.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: I think the biggest mistake that's happened so far is Abu Ghraib.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: But is another Abu Ghraib about to explode, as Pentagon investigators are convinced that Marines murdered Iraqi civilians?

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

WARNER: There are established facts that incidents of a very serious nature did take place.

MURTHA: There's no question in my mind, they overreacted. There was no combat. They went into houses and killed people.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: What really happened at Haditha? Was there a cover-up? And how will Iraq and the Muslim world react to the news? We'll ask our headliners, Congressman John Murtha, and the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner.

Then, as the Senate passes immigration reform, an FBI raid on House member William Jefferson sets off a constitutional clash between Congress and the White House.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. REP. DENNIS HASTERT (R-IL), SPEAKER: We're going to protect the (inaudible) of the House as far as the Constitution.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: We'll debate that and the rest of the week's politics on our roundtable, with George Will, Martha Raddatz, E.J. Dionne of The Washington Post and former Congressman John Kasich of FOX News.

Plus -- Tony Orlando.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ORLANDO: They said, you know, you're going to be singing this song to welcome home troops for the rest of your career.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: And as always, The Sunday Funnies.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP) DAVID LETTERMAN, TALK SHOW HOST: And kind of a minor heat wave. As a matter of fact, down in Washington, D.C. earlier today, it was so hot, so hot in Washington, that one congressman actually got into the freezer with his bribe money.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

STEPHANOPOULOS: Good morning, everyone. We begin with that investigation into possible war crimes by U.S. Marines in Iraq. Two separate military panels are poised to conclude that on November 19th, 2005, after a roadside bomb hit a convoy of Marines in the town of Haditha, killing Lance Corporal Miguel Terrazas, several Marines went on a rampage, killing 24 Iraqis, all but one unarmed, including children and the women trying to protect them.

Investigators are also compiling evidence of a cover-up, and Pentagon officials tell ABC News that at least seven Marines could face criminal charges, ranging from dereliction of duty to murder.

Key members of the House and Senate have been briefed on the investigation, including our headliners, Senator John Warner and Congressman John Murtha, who's our first guest. Welcome back, sir.

MURTHA: Nice, George, you've come a long ways.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Thank you, sir. You've been briefed several times on this incident on November 19th, and you've said that the evidence shows the Marines killed innocent civilians in cold blood. From what you know, what happened?

MURTHA: Well, there's no question in my mind. What happened, it was an IED went off.

And you have got to put this in perspective. Every day they go out, an IED goes off. I sanitize when I say IED; I'm talking about explosive device goes off. It doesn't hurt somebody one day; the next day it kills somebody; the next day it maims somebody. And I see those people in the hospital all the time. So the pressure builds every time they go out.

So this particular case, an IED exploded. It killed one Marine. And then a taxi drives up. When the taxi comes up, there's four or five people in it. And they shoot those four or five people, unarmed. And then, they go on a rampage throughout the houses and kill people.

One woman, as I understand it, in talking to the officials in the Marine Corps, was bending over a child, pleading for mercy, and they shot her in cold blood.

That's the thing that's so disturbing. And even more disturbing is the fact that we know the Iraqis knew about it, because they made payments to the Iraqis for accidental deaths or for salacious deaths, whatever you want to call it. And then in addition to that, there has to have been a cover-up of this thing. And...

STEPHANOPOULOS: You believe there was a cover-up? MURTHA: Oh, no question about it. First of all, they tried to say is the IED is what killed these people. The next day, there was a team out there investigating as they always do. And then, nothing happened. Nobody hears about it. They don't tell anybody. Until March, when Time magazine broke the news, nobody realized or recognized what happened.

These kind of things have to be brought out immediately, because the Marines, if they did get away with it, then other Marines would say, well, I'll do the same thing. As a matter of fact, we have another incident, which is very similar to this, George. An incident where a Marine -- or some Marines pulled somebody out of a house, put them next to an IED thing, fired some AKA's so they'd have cartridges there, and then tried to cover that up.

STEPHANOPOULOS: April 26th in Hamandiyah, and several Marines have been put into custody for that as well.

Let me stay on Haditha for a second. We've read that there's evidence, photographic evidence of what happened. Is that true?

MURTHA: Yes, that's exactly true. And it's a combination of the people who did the investigation, and Iraqis took the evidence itself. There's no question about what happened.

And the problem is, who covered up? And why did they cover it up? Why did they wait so long? It's been six months since this happened. It's very simple. They went out the next day, they knew there was something wrong. Two or three days later, they decided that these people were murdered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So who do you blame for the cover-up?

MURTHA: Well, that's what we're trying to figure out. We don't know how far it goes. I mean, it goes right up the chain of command, right up to General Pace. When did he know about it? Did he order the cover-up? Who ordered the cover-up? I'm sure he didn't, but what -- who said, we're not going to publicize this thing? We're not even going to investigate it? Until March, there was no serious investigation. There was an investigation right afterwards, but then it was stifled.

So, we need to know what happened.

And the point is that the pressure, the tremendous pressure on these guys, every day, when they go out with an explosive device. Second is, the Marines knew about it. And so, this gets around the Marine community, as I'd heard rumors about this. Then third is, the Iraqis all knew about it. You can bet.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Three commanders have been relieved of their duty. Is that connected to this?

MURTHA: Well, they tell me it's not connected. They tell me this is dereliction of duty. But we cannot allow something like this to fester. We can't allow it to happen. They've got to put the blame where it goes. And they've got to get this over with.

We've got to make sure -- we're celebrating Memorial Day. And Memorial Day, the freedom and democracy of this great country, and the people that fight for it. And we memorialize the people that have died, and the ones that have fought for the country and the family. And here we are with something like this, which we've got to make sure the world knows this is not something that our troops do. We can't allow something like this.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And are you absolutely sure, though, that this wasn't something that happened in the fog of war? There was confusion, that they thought there was fire coming from the houses, and they thought they were responding to enemy fire from insurgents?

MURTHA: The reports that I have, from the highest level, no firing at all. No interaction. No military action at all in this particular incident. It was an explosive device, which killed a Marine. From then on, it was purely shooting people inside the houses and in a taxi.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Time magazine reports this morning, and they also have a photo that shows a Marine with -- it was taken by a Marine with a cell phone, showing Iraqis kneeling before they were shot. Is that true?

MURTHA: Well, I hear that one of them was, he was, in English, asking for mercy. And so I haven't heard that. I saw that in Time magazine, sitting on your table out there. It was the first I knew about that.

But I've heard rumors like that the whole time. The point is, the Marines knew about it all this time. Somebody in the chain of command decided not to allow this to happen. How far up it went, I don't know.

But the worst thing is, the Iraqis all knew about it. And then, they made payments to the families, which -- and that doesn't happen at the lowest level. That happens at the highest level, before they make a decision to make payments to the families.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You know, a Marine who was accused last year of committing war crimes, Lt. Ilario Pantano, he's written a letter to The Washington Post this morning, saying you're rushing to judgment. And saying that, as he wrote in the Post, Members of the U.S. military serving in Iraq need more than Mr. Murtha's pseudo-sympathy. Let the courts decide if these Marines are guilty. They haven't even been charged with a crime yet, so it is premature to presume their guilt unless that presumption is tied to a political motive.

MURTHA: George, I can understand anybody that's been over there, I can understand anybody that feels that you're denigrating the troops. What I'm saying is, there's nobody done more for the troops than I have. Nobody's worked harder than I have in trying to make sure the troops have what they need.

But I will not excuse murder. And this is what happened. There's no question in my mind about it. This investigation should have been over two or three weeks afterwards, and it should have been made public, and people should have been held responsible for it.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The commandant of the Marine Corps, Michael Hagee, has been in Iraq for the last several days talking to the troops. Not about this incident, he says, but reminding them of their duties under the laws of war. Do you believe the Marine Corps is doing what it takes to fix whatever happened here?

MURTHA: Yeah. And you've got to remember here that General Hagee's not in the chain of command in this particular incident, because this goes through the chain of command up to General Casey, to General Abizaid and then to General Pace. So, technically, he's in the chain of command when it comes to punishment, but otherwise --now, he's acting very quickly now, going out and telling the troops we cannot do something like this.

It erodes -- this is the kind of war you have to win the hearts and minds of the people. We can't win this militarily. It's now got to be a political victory. And we're set back every time something like this happens. This is worse than Abu Ghraib.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, we've already read that al Qaida in Iraq is sending videotapes to mosques in Jordan, in Saudi Arabia, Syria, trying to recruit new insurgents to Iraq. How worried are you --how much damage do you believe this is going to do to the U.S. relations with the Muslim world? And will it become a recruiting tool for terrorists?

MURTHA: George, we've already lost the direction in this war. We've diverted ourselves from the real war against terrorism, into Iraq. We made a mistake by going to Iraq. I've said this over and over again.

And we can't win it militarily. This is the problem we have. Now, the political successes that we talk about are rhetorical successes, almost. Sure. We've got a government formed now. But the two biggest ministries aren't completed, interior and defense.

So when you look at this whole thing, you say to yourself, what progress has been made? All the type things I measure -- sewage all over the streets. Water, only one hour a day they get water. They have to turn water on in the middle of the night. Electricity below prewar level. Oil production below prewar level -- that's how I measure success.

And only the Iraqis can handle this.

This is the thing I've been saying. Our American troops are caught in a civil war. I understand what happened. I don't excuse what happened, but I understand what happened.

STEPHANOPOULOS: More than a million U.S. servicepeople have served in Iraq honorably. Are you convinced that this is an isolated incident?

MURTHA: Well, I hope it's an isolated incident. I would expect that we'll find out there are few incidents like this.

But when you get pressure that they're under every day, when they go out and there's an explosion and it doesn't kill somebody, the explosion then kills somebody, an explosion blows somebody apart. And I see the results of those explosions in the hospital when I go out there almost every week.

You begin to recognize that the pressure could cause it. But we have so few people. Less than one percent of the people in the United States are involved in this war. So they go back over and over again.

Some have been back four and five times. I got a letter from a 10-year-old child. And the child says to me, I appreciate the support of the troops. Don't let my dad be deployed for the fourth time.

And another one was sitting beside her son who's been in the hospital for over a year, hit by an IED. His brain's shaken. He's been in a coma. He can only move his eyeballs.

This is the type thing that I see that we don't need to put up with. The Iraqis can only settle this themselves. They don't want our advice. Sistani didn't even open a letter to the president.

So on Memorial Day, we want to be confident that most of our soldiers would not do something like this. It's an isolated incident. But that's why it's so important to get it out in the open and get the punishment at the appropriate places.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Congressman Murtha, we have to end it there. Thank you very much.

MURTHA: Nice talking to you, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner, is next. And later, Tony Orlando on his ties to veterans.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ORLANDO: The yellow ribbon is a symbol of hope, love and hope. It means, I'm coming home; I've done my time.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

STEPHANOPOULOS: And we are joined now by the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, John Warner. Welcome back to This Week, sir.

WARNER: Thank you, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You heard Congressman Murtha just a moment ago. He is convinced, based on his briefings, that war crimes were committed here. Are you?

WARNER: George, at this time, particularly on Memorial Day, when our hearts and minds go out to the families of generations, not just the Afghan/Iraq generation but all the way back to World War II, I think we should be calm and reassuring to the American people that the men and women of our armed forces are admirably and professionally conducting their heavy responsibilities and taking risks throughout the world.

So a sense of calmness, I think, should be brought over this tragic situation that's developing in Iraq with regard to Marines.

I respect my friend, John Murtha. I also was privileged to wear the Marine uniform. And those of us who have had that opportunity are really heartfelt about this situation today.

But we've got to let the uniform code of military justice, the investigation system, proceed before we reach any conclusions on this matter.

I was briefed by the commandant. He came in to see me, and left that afternoon to go over to Iraq, to address his beloved Marines and tell them that the traditions of the corps, going way back to 1776, have not changed. And we're there to protect freedom, but do it in a way where we have respect.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you have said that based on what you heard, you believe that something serious did occur here on November 19th?

WARNER: Yes. I've drawn many years of experience in the Senate and in the Pentagon as secretary of the Navy. This is very serious, but the military are looking at it equally serious.

There is this serious question, however, of what happened and when it happened and what was the immediate reaction of the senior officers in the Marine Corps when they began to gain knowledge of it. I mean, senior by the captains, the majors, lieutenant colonels and on up the chain.

So much of these facts have come through disclosures by the civilian population, the Iraqis. It seems to me it was incumbent upon the military as soon as this situation happened to go back and inspect the sites, as they do, as a matter over routine, when there's deaths like this. Take pictures, which are done solely for the purpose of establishing forensic evidence, and so forth, and come forward with it as quickly as they could.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So do you think they did come forward quickly enough? Congressman Murtha clearly thinks they did not.

WARNER: Well, there is a question. And I'm not going to pronounce judgment. But that is seriously a question that is going to be examined.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The investigation didn't begin until after Time magazine, I believe in February, went to the military with this documentary evidence.

WARNER: That's right. But all I can assure the American public this morning, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I'll do exactly what we did with Abu Ghraib. Those people were before our committee, promptly, raising their right hand, under oath, giving the explanation in full.

STEPHANOPOULOS: When will you do that?

WARNER: As soon as I cannot interfere with the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as it begins to protect the rights of all those involved.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You mentioned Abu Ghraib. And I was talking to Congressman Murtha about this, as well. Some of the observes have said this is going to be even more serious matter, an even more serious matter for the United States in the Muslim world, because people were killed here. And it could explode throughout the Muslim world.

What can the United States do now to blunt that impact?

WARNER: Exactly what they're doing. Doing a complete investigation. And I think it wasn't pointed out earlier, that not only are the Marine Corps investigating, but Centcom, Admiral (sic) Abizaid, has determined that the Army should give also a totally unbiased analysis of the particularly the chain of command reaction.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So you believe the military here has learned the lessons of Abu Ghraib, about at least how to investigate and bring forward the information here?

WARNER: I do, indeed.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And do you believe the president has?

WARNER: I think the president as commander in chief has got to be very cautious, as have I, because we do not wish to influence this situation, such that there's any prejudice to those involved under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

STEPHANOPOULOS: We've also learned about this other incident, that occurred in Hamandiyah, Iraq...

WARNER: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: ... that Congressman Murtha mentioned, on April 26th. What else are you learning about these kinds of incidents? Are we getting everything, I mean all of the allegations coming out right now? Or are you concerned that we're going to find out in coming days and weeks that there's actually far more incidents like this?

WARNER: George, we shouldn't speculate. And that's one of the reasons when I talked to the commandant. He's going to look into that. As to whether or not there's an overall sort of command failure of reminding Marines and soldiers every day of their oath of office, their commitment and what they were taught in training as to how to use force and when not to use force.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Here's what one Navy corpsman at Camp Pendleton said -- told the L.A. Times. He said: The Geneva Convention doesn't really exist over there. We're dealing with terrorists, not an army. That was Navy Corpsman Ken Pearson (ph) of Milwaukee. Do you think that's a wide-spread feeling among the military?

WARNER: Well, there's been some confusion in the past as to exactly how we should treat people who are not connected with any state, that is some government, who are acting on their own initiative. And clearly not within the confines of a governmental type of aggression.

These are terrorists. They're disparate people coming from many lands over there and using their bodies and their bombs to kill others.

We are now in the final stages of preparing what we call the Army manual, which lays out for the men and women of the armed forces and for all to understand exactly what our military can and cannot do in terms of the interrogation and other applications.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Let me change topics, now, to Iran.

There's been a debate going on inside the administration and inside the Congress about whether the president should begin to engage in direct talks with the Iranians.

Do you believe he should?

WARNER: Well, I've said, and I'll repeat it here today, is that I think the option for what we call unilateral or bilateral, between the United States and Iran, should remain on the table.

As a matter of fact, there was some suggestion that the president had advised ambassador Khalilzad, when he thought, Khalilzad thought, it was opportune, he could do so.

So I simply say the administration should leave that option on the table. Do not take it off.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But should they invite the Iranians to talk?

WARNER: Well, that's the finery of diplomacy. We've got to entrust the secretary of state and the president to decide when and if to use that option.

But I also encourage NATO to step up and take a look at this situation. Here we have the Security Council working it. We have the United States, Great Britain and France, working on this issue, countries in the E.U.

It's time for NATO to come to the roundtable because there's definitely a looming threat. Iran already has missiles that can reach Europe. And if they now are proceeding to develop a nuclear weapon, that's a direct threat...

STEPHANOPOULOS: When you say NATO come to the table, do you want them to deploy troops around Iran?

WARNER: No, look. Start just a planning phase. If the 26 nations of NATO were to announce, we're going to look at how we, NATO, drawing on the lessons of the Cold War, where the deterrence doctrine prevented a shot being fired, really, in anger, and that Cold War came to an end -- apply it to this situation.

And we will sit at the table with the IAEA, the U.N. Security Council and so forth and work this thing through. STEPHANOPOULOS: Before you go, I have to show our viewers a little piece of history. This week, you cast your 10,000th vote in the Senate, becoming only the 26th senator in all of U.S. history to do that. Congratulations, sir.

WARNER: Well, thank you. I'm very grateful to the good Lord and my family and my colleagues in the Senate. It's an enormously marvelous privilege, I accept very humbly, to serve in the Senate and continue to do so, George.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, come back to This Week.

WARNER: Thank you.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Mr. Chairman, thanks very much.

The roundtable is next, with George Will, Martha Raddatz, E.J. Dionne, and John Kasich.

And later, the Sunday funnies.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JAY LENO, HOST, THE TONIGHT SHOW: Hey, Mexican president Vicente Fox arrived in the U.S. today. So it's official. He's the last one. Turn out the lights; they're all here now.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

STEPHANOPOULOS: Our voice this week, Tony Orlando.

During the last days of the Vietnam War, his song, Yellow Ribbon, became a pop anthem.

(MUSIC)

Orlando's been devoted to America's veterans ever since. And on this Memorial Day, he's releasing a new book called Tie a Yellow Ribbon, and donating proceeds to U.S. Vets, a group dedicated to finding homes for those who have served.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

ORLANDO: Yellow Ribbon was not a song that was ever written to make a political statement. It was truly a love song.

I had no idea that it would have a significance to the American people or become part of tapestry of American folklore.

My first experience with it was when he sang it live for the first time at the Cotton Bowl, with Bob Hope to welcome home our prisoners of war from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. And on all Bob Hope shows, the list of stars was long as his arm, and I got -- and I asked, Mr. Hope, why did you pick us? And he said, oh, I heard your record on the radio, and that opening line, I'm coming home, I've done my time, Tony, is every mother's wish and (inaudible), and every soldier's dream come true.

And he said, you know, you're going to be singing this song to welcome home troops for the rest of your career.

OK, from the heart, to the back, sing it!

I can use The Yellow Ribbon as a source to simply raise a dollar or to help a veteran or a find a van for a disabled veteran in some small town, because they can't get to the Wal-Mart to buy what they needed at home. Then, everything I've done as a performer has been worth it to me.

I hope to communicate to young people that Veterans Day and Memorial Day is not about an old man with a flag in a parade. That they understand what veteran means. What it took to gain that title.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

(THE SUNDAY FUNNIES)

That's all for today. Coming up next week, in his first and only Sunday interview in more than three years, former vice president, Al Gore.

Thanks for sharing part of your Sunday with us. And travel safe this holiday weekend.

We'll see you next week.

FOX – NEWS SUNDAY

CHRIS WALLACE, HOST: I'm Chris Wallace. A reduced role for U.S. troops in Iraq, next on "Fox News Sunday".

The Senate takes a major step toward immigration reform. But will it become law? We'll cover the legislative landscape with the Senate majority leader, Bill Frist, and the Democrats' assistant leader Dick Durbin.

Also, the FBI raid of a congressional office touches off a constitutional conflict and pits Republicans versus Republicans. What does it mean? We'll ask our panel, Brit Hume, Nina Easton, Bill Kristol and Juan Williams.

And on this Memorial Day weekend, our Power Player of the Week honors his fallen comrades, all right now on "Fox News Sunday".

And good morning again from Fox News in Washington. Let's get a quick check of the latest headlines. A senior U.S. military official says security in Baghdad could be turned over to Iraqi forces by year's end.

More peaceful parts of the country will be controlled by Iraqis this summer. The scaled-back role could allow U.S. troop levels to be reduced, but the official says there's still no timetable.

The Justice Department has asked two federal judges to dismiss legal challenges to the NSA warrantless wiretap program. The government says court action could cause grave damage to national security.

And officials in Indonesia say Saturday's earthquake killed more than 4,200 people and injured thousands more. The U.S. and other nations have pledged millions of dollars in aid.

And on this busy and controversial week in Congress, we're joined now by the Senate majority leader, Bill Frist.

Senator, welcome back to "Fox News Sunday".

SEN. BILL FRIST (R-TN), MAJORITY LEADER): Chris, good to be with you.

WALLACE: Let's start with immigration. Here's what you said after the Senate passed a comprehensive package this week. Let's take a look.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

FRIST: This is a success for the American people. It is a success for the people who hope to participate some day in that American dream.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Senator, is it a success for the American people that illegal immigrants are going to be able to collect Social Security benefits and even tax credits on past illegal work?

Is it a success for America that American officials must confer with Mexican authorities before they start building a fence on the border?

FRIST: Chris, the success for the American people is that we've got about two million people coming across our borders every year illegally. We don't know who they are. We don't know really what their intentions are. We've got hemorrhaging coming across our border.

So the success for the American people is that our government, the United States Senate, as a first step, have in a comprehensive way addressed a problem that is economic, that is humanitarian, and that has to do with our national security.

It has to be comprehensive, because that's the only way we can stop this hemorrhaging coming across our borders.

WALLACE: But how do you respond -- and I don't want you to go into each individual thing, but there are a lot of measures there which I mentioned. I'm getting a lot of e-mail about them -- I'm sure you are as well -- where people are saying this is a giveaway, we're a sovereign nation.

FRIST: Well, you know, I don't agree with everything in the bill. What I do agree with is that the Senate approach is saying that we've got to be tough on our borders, stop hemorrhaging across our border. Yet we've got to address the fact that we're a magnet to pulling people across the border by not enforcing the laws at our workplace.

The reality that you can't just take 12 million people here, millions of whom are fully assimilated into our society, and send them back, and the fact that we in this country do need a strong temporary worker program with people coming to this country on our farms, in our entertainment industry, in our hospitality industry, in our construction industry.

Those are the realities today. It's not necessarily politically popular. It's certainly not easy, as we've seen on the floor. But I can tell you the bill that came off the Senate floor -- not perfect; I don't agree with everything in that bill -- does reflect the overall will of the Senate.

It's a first step. We're going to go to conference. The president obviously is going to get very involved. And with that, we'll be able to address what is a national security, economic and humanitarian issue.

WALLACE: All right. As you point out, now the real hard work starts. You've got to work out a compromise with the House. On Friday, the lead House negotiator, Congressman Sensenbrenner, rejected the path to citizenship as a non-starter. Here he is.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SENSENBRENNER: Well, I reject the spin that the senators have been putting on their proposal. It is amnesty.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Would you, would the Senate, accept as a compromise a bill that takes out the path to earned legalization?

FRIST: Chris, I think we need to -- if the goal is national security, for example, it is mighty hard to say that we've got 12 million people living out around this country, out in the communities of our viewers today, and say you stay in the shadows, everything will be okay.

I think, you know, politically it is tough, and thus when we say comprehensive, temporary worker program, employer workplace, strong at the border, we do, I feel, have to address the 12 million people to bring them out of the shadows. So we'll see what happens.

The Senate has taken a position which is the position that I just outlined -- not perfect. There are things in there I don't agree with. The House has taken a position that does not look at the temporary worker program.

WALLACE: But I'm going to try and press this. Are you ruling out any bill that would strip out the earned legalization?

FRIST: No, I'm not going to -- I'm going to basically say we've seen the will of the Senate reflected. We've seen the House will. Although the majority leader in the House side, Majority Leader Boehner, said let's get together, let's look for common ground and let's move ahead -- again, it may not be politically popular in every single case, but let's do what's right for the American people.

WALLACE: Your conservative critics say that you have flip-flopped on precisely this issue, and they point out what you said last October when you were asked what should happen to the millions of illegals who are here in the country right now. Take a look.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

FRIST: They should be sent back. And, again, I will say, in principle, I oppose amnesty.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Now, you were still saying that same thing as recently as this March, two months ago, and yet you voted precisely for what you were then calling amnesty this week.

FRIST: You know, what we have done and what I did vote for is basically say if you've been here less than two years, you do get sent back. If you came across this border in the last two years -- from two to five years, you go into a temporary worker program.

If you're here greater than five years and you are willing to put another six years and then another five years up for a probationary period, and willing to pay a $3,000 fine, willing to learn English, willing to pay back taxes, willing to have a job, have to have a job, then you can be eligible for citizenship.

So let me go back just real quickly. In October of last year, the same time that clip was, I said we were going to take a border security, strong border security, to the floor. I did exactly that four weeks ago.

I said at that time that we were going to build it out with a strong temporary worker program. We did exactly that -- with strong employer workplace program. We did exactly that.

One last thing real quick is I think the debate has matured a lot. The American people are paying attention and I expect that to continue as we go to conference.

WALLACE: But, Senator, why was it amnesty to provide for these millions -- and the vast majority of them are the ones that have been here more than five years, so it's precisely that group. Why was it amnesty in October? Why was it amnesty in march? And yet you voted for it in May?

FRIST: No, but we did change it. And again, I hope that you and your viewers pay attention to what we actually did in the conference.

The bill that we put on the floor was to get 12 million people here, just leave them out, really no essential barriers there, and what we did is took that bill with compromise and made it into the zero to two years, you are deported, you go back home -- three to five years -- all that's new. That was amendments in the bill.

So the bill was radically changed -- again, not perfect. I call amnesty giving somebody who broke the law a leg up on citizenship. And that's not -- this bill does not do that.

It does give them a 16-year period in which they have to go through certain hoops before they're eligible for citizenship -- five years in the country, six years' probationary period, five years with a green card before they get to citizenship.

WALLACE: I want to ask you, because -- I want to move on to other subjects, but I want to ask you two more immigration questions, so let's try and go through these quickly.

One compromise that some House members are now suggesting is a phase program: Start the border enforcement now, delay the guest worker program until you've certified the borders are acceptable. You are secure. You voted for that...

FRIST: I did.

WALLACE: ... in the Senate and you lost.

FRIST: Yes, I lost.

WALLACE: Would you accept that as part of a Senate-House compromise?

FRIST: Well, no, I personally would, because I think, first and foremost, you've got to lock down the borders. You can't allow this hemorrhaging of millions of people. We caught 1.2 million people last year.

For every one coming across, at least two snuck across. We've got to lock down the borders. I do think we need a strong temporary worker program right now, and I think if we want to keep food on the table right now, that people can come here -- temporary, where people come for a period of time and go back home.

And I do lastly think the employer workplace -- we have to enforce the law of the land. We're not enforcing the law of the land today.

WALLACE: One more housekeeping question. Some Republicans have suggested put this whole conference off until after the November election.

FRIST: No, no. You can't do that. I know, first of all, politically -- I know the politics are out there. And I know people ultimately have to do what's in their best interest for their district or for their state.

But we've got a national security problem. It's an economic problem. It's a humanitarian problem. People are dying coming across these borders.

And if we as a governing party or as the United States Congress can't address these tough issues head on like we did in the United States Senate for four weeks, with good debate, open debate and amendment, improving the bill -- still not yet a perfect bill -- then we really shouldn't be here. It's not politically popular all the time, but we've got to do what's right for the American people.

WALLACE: You met with Attorney General Gonzales on Friday to discuss the FBI raid exactly a week ago of Congressman Jefferson's office.

Do you believe that a raid by the executive branch with a court order violates the separation of powers? And what did you discuss with Attorney General Gonzales?

FRIST: No, no, no. I don't. Was this a raid? I'm not sure if it was a raid or not. I mean...

WALLACE: They went into his office and...

FRIST: If somebody has a search warrant...

(CROSSTALK)

WALLACE: ... files.

FRIST: ... if there are accusations of bribery, of having lost the trust, abused the trust of the American people, criminal activity, no House member, no senator, nobody in government should be above the law of the land, period.

And a search warrant was obtained to go in. So to answer your question, no, I don't think it abused separation of powers. I think there's allegations of criminal activity, and the American people need to have the law enforced.

I don't think it was a separation of powers question. I've looked at it very carefully. There is in the Constitution, in Article I, this whole speech and debate wording. Since this type of event has never occurred in Washington, in the United States Congress, I think we all need to look and see what the clause -- what the case history on that clause means, and that's where the debate is today.

I think we've seen it pretty much put to bed now, I hope. I trust our Department of Justice in looking over and talking to the attorney general. I think they acted appropriately. I do think that we in Congress need to make sure whatever precedent this does set is one that shows that no congressperson is above the rule of law.

WALLACE: So specifically, you're OK, then, with this?

FRIST: I'm OK and I think the president handled it well, because we had tempers flying, and, I guess, people saying that he might retire, resign, and back and forth.

We don't need to be doing that. And so the president came in and put a pause, 45 days, to let things settle down. And I think over the last 24 hours things have really settled down. And I think the lawyers will decide.

I don't think it's an issue of the separation of powers or balance of powers, and so I'm comfortable where we stand today.

WALLACE: Finally, let's talk some politics. How much danger are Republicans in of losing control of the Senate this November?

FRIST: Well, I think right now, when you've got energy prices high, when you've got people, millions of people, coming across our borders today, when you've got the war in Iraq that people are uncomfortable in the sense of seeing people dying every day, not fully realizing the great progress that has been made in the last few weeks in standing up their government, that the environment is very, very tough.

I think our responsibility is to govern with meaningful solutions, taking the tough problems like immigration head on, dealing with them in a way that is civil, that is respectful, will earn and help re-earn the trust of the American people. Our agenda will be to support our troops overseas, secure peace and safety at home, securing prosperity. The economy itself is booming -- 5.3 million jobs in the last three years, 4.7 percent unemployment, lower than average of the '60s, '70s and '80s. That's the good news that's out there to counterbalance the other.

We need to demonstrate to the American people that we can govern with meaningful solutions on the tough problems that are out there.

WALLACE: All right. You talk about a lot of issues that affect people's lives, and yet you're going to bring two constitutional amendments to the Senate floor in the next few weeks, one to ban same- sex marriage, another to ban flag burning, both reportedly in the papers to mobilize your conservative base.

I have to tell you I talked to a Republican senator this week who said he may vote for both of them but said they're both pandering. Are gay marriage and flag burning the most important issues the Senate can be addressing in June of 2006?

FRIST: Let me tell you what the agenda is real quick. Secure America's safety here at home. I mentioned supporting our troops overseas, making sure we pass that supplemental bill, making sure we tighten down our borders, securing America, a healthier America, so we'll continue...

WALLACE: All right, but let's get to these two amendments.

FRIST: No, but let me tell you, because right now there's no prioritization there. Securing America's values -- and I hope tomorrow and today, as people see that American flag -- and I'm going to Arlington Cemetery tomorrow, and I'm going to see that American flag waving on every single grave over there.

And when you look at that flag and then you tell me that right now people in this country are saying it's OK to desecrate that flag and to burn it and to not pay respect to it -- is that important to our values as a people when we've got 130,000 people fighting for our freedom and liberty today? That is important.

It may not be important here in Washington where people say well, it's political posturing and all, but it's important to the heart and soul of the American people.

WALLACE: Sir, sir...

FRIST: Marriage, let me just -- marriage you asked about.

WALLACE: OK.

FRIST: Right now, why marriage today? Marriage is for our society -- that union between a man and a woman is the cornerstone of our society. It is under attack today.

Right now there are 13 states who passed constitutional amendments in the 1.5 years to protect marriage. Why? Because in nine states today, activist judges, unelected activist judges, are tearing down state laws in nine states today.

That's why I will take it to the floor of the Senate -- simply define marriage as the union between a man and a woman.

WALLACE: All right. We have less than a minute left. It's no secret that you're considering a run for president in 2008. You were asked recently about how difficult it is to be the Senate majority leader and considering a presidential run, and you responded with not one but four terribles.

You're going to be out of the Senate next year. You've decided not to run again. Will we see Bill Frist unplugged?

FRIST: You know, we'll see. As you know, I'm a physician. I spent 20 years in medicine. And that is my life. It's healing one on one. And I spent 12 years in the United States Senate, hopefully, being able to participate to a healing process, a better quality of life, of looking at things like immigration and health care and education.

And so I'll make a decision when I leave. I'm pretty comfortable who I am.

I am committed to healing, whether it's doing my best in politics, in policy, or the 20 years I spent in medicine. Then I'll make a decision after we leave.

WALLACE: Senator Frist, we're going to have to leave it there. We want to thank you so much for coming in, especially on this holiday weekend. It looks like you're going to have a busy summer, sir.

FRIST: Yes, indeed. Good to be with you.

WALLACE: Thank you.

FRIST: Thank you.

WALLACE: Coming up, what are Democrats offering the American people? We'll talk with their number two man in the Senate, Dick Durbin, after this break.

WALLACE: Joining us now from his home state of Illinois, the Democrats' assistant leader in the Senate, Dick Durbin.

Senator, welcome back to "Fox News Sunday".

SEN. RICHARD DURBIN (D), ILLINOIS: Thanks, Chris.

WALLACE: One of the features of the Senate immigration bill that has drawn the most fire, as we just discussed with Senator Frist, is this measure that requires that before any building of fences goes on along the U.S. border that the U.S. officials must consult with Mexican authorities.

You, in fact, voted for that, Senator. Is it the view of the Democratic Party that the United States does not have the sovereign right to enforce its own borders?

DURBIN: Well, of course we do. There's no question about it. And we have to start with good border enforcement. The Dodd amendment that you're referring to was part of a manager's package, but I supported it.

I mean, to think that we would build a fence without any conversation or consultation with Mexico -- that doesn't make sense.

WALLACE: Why do we need a consultation? It's our border. Why do we need to confer or consult at all?

DURBIN: Good fences make good neighbors, too. And remember that when it's all over, there'll be cities across the border from one another in the United States and Mexico, and you'll find in most instances they try to find a level of cooperation.

We ultimately want to have the cooperation of the Mexican government. That's going to make this a lot easier, to stop the corruption on either side of the border, to stop these coyotes that are taking thousands of dollars to push people across that border at the risk of losing their lives.

We should have consultation. There's nothing wrong with that.

WALLACE: Let's discuss, as I did with Senator Frist, the basis for a compromise. Will Senate Democrats accept any bill, as Congressman Sensenbrenner has suggested, that strips out the path to earned legalization?

DURBIN: Well, I'm troubled by that. I don't want to prejudge the conference, because I will be a conferee. There are parts of this bill that I don't like. I voted for Byron Dorgan's amendment which eliminated this guest worker provision.

You know, originally, it was 400,000 a year, and it was going to go up just with no end in sight. And because of amendment by Byron Dorgan and by Jeff Bingaman, we brought it down to 200,000 capped.

You know, I'm worried about the impact on American workers. We tried to put a sunset on it so that in five years we take a look. I don't want to lose American jobs as a result of this. But unfortunately, we didn't prevail.

So there are provisions in this that I'm concerned about. I want to make sure we treat people fairly, we have good border enforcement, but we also have to keep an eye on the American workers, is the bottom line.

WALLACE: Will Senate Democrats accept a bill -- and this is something that apparently is gaining some traction in the House -- that would have a phase program where you have to certify that you have secured the borders first and then a guest worker program kicks in?

DURBIN: Well, enforcement is critical. I agree completely with Senator Frist that the borders are out of control.

Over the last five years we've dramatically increased the personnel at the border and during the same period of time there's been a dramatic increase in illegal immigration. So enforcement by itself is not enough.

You need to do three things. Put that border enforcement as the first priority, and then workplace enforcement. Let employers across America know they can no longer be magnets for illegals coming into this country, that people are going to have to present tamper-proof I.D.s and that employers will be held accountable if they hire illegal people.

And then, finally, we have to deal with the people who are here living in the shadows. It's not amnesty. It's not automatic. As Senator Frist explained, it's a long, tough process that many of them will not complete successfully, but at least gives them a chance.

WALLACE: Senator, what about Speaker Hastert's insistence that he'll only bring up a bill -- if there's a conference agreement, he'll only bring up any bill to the House floor if it's supported by a majority of a majority, which means that most House Republicans will support it? Do you have any problems with that?

DURBIN: Well, Denny Hastert is my friend, and I've heard him say that in the past, and I think it's a good statement for a person who wants to remain as the leader of his own caucus. But I hope that he'll take a look at his national responsibility here.

This is an issue where bipartisanship is essential, and the vote in the United States Senate reflected it, both in the Judiciary Committee and on the floor. And if they can put together a strong bipartisan coalition in the House of Representatives for an answer to a complicated problem, we should do it.

We've waited 20 years to address this. The immigration system is in shambles. We can't walk away at the end of this year claiming political victories. We ought to do something constructive.

WALLACE: Let's talk about the raid on Congressman Jefferson's office last week. At a time when Democrats are trying to make a campaign issue out of an alleged culture of corruption in Congress, is there anything wrong with the FBI, with a court order, going into the office of a congressman where those FBI officials found $90,000 in cash stuffed into his home freezer?

DURBIN: Well, let me say two things. First, no one is above the law -- that's been said over and over again -- including members of Congress.

And second, call me old-fashioned, but I believe in the presumption of innocence. I will tell you, though, in this situation, what we know is overwhelmingly negative against Congressman Jefferson.

Getting down to the point in question here, this is rare. I don't think it's happened in history that the FBI has raided a congressional office. So that's why people in both parties have raised questions.

I asked my staff. I said has the FBI ever raided the chambers of a judge, another branch of government. The answer is yes. So at least there is precedent for going into those who are part of another branch of government.

The only other provision's a speech and debate clause in the Constitution. I'm not sure that you can stretch it to apply to this situation. In the next several weeks, we ought to take a hard look at it. I'm not going to rule it in or out at this moment. WALLACE: But you sound like you're, at this point, having researched it, somewhat favorably disposed toward the idea that the FBI did nothing wrong.

DURBIN: Well, I went to the first question of separation of powers. Can the executive branch, the FBI, raid another branch of government's official offices? And I find yes, they've done that when it comes to judges. So it appears that there's been some precedent for this.

Now, as I said, there are other provisions in the Constitution to look at, but that was the first question I asked.

WALLACE: Do you think, particularly with culture of corruption being such a big issue, that the House Democratic leader, Nancy Pelosi, is making a mistake making such a big issue of this?

DURBIN: No, I think she's trying to be assertive when it comes to any allegations of corruption and they're only allegations at this point. But I think that she has shown that she will be more forceful and show leadership if these allegations come forward. On the other side, on the Republican side, look how long some of these cases have dragged on involving Congressman DeLay and others. I think she is trying to say that given a chance in leadership, she'll be much more forceful in ending this culture of corruption.

WALLACE: All right. Finally, let's talk some politics. I want to ask you the flip side of the question that I asked Senator Frist. What do you think are your -- are the Democratic chances of taking over the Senate in November?

DURBIN: I think we have a chance. I think we have many good candidates across the United States, and I believe that the tide of public opinion is flowing in our direction. People believe that it's time for significant change in direction in this country.

The Bush-Cheney policies are being rejected overwhelmingly. I think the people understand that they have failed. We now have an endless war in Iraq and, sadly, we've lost over 2,460 of our best and bravest young men and women. No end in sight.

We know that the deficit situation is totally out of control. This president is the first president in the history of the United States to initiate a tax cut in the middle of a war.

We have no energy policy. We have no plan to bring health insurance to every single American. There's no vision or leadership in this administration. So yes, the stage is set for the Democrats to step forward in each of those areas and say give us a chance, let us try to take this one-party rule in Washington and bring some balance to government.

WALLACE: Finally, there's a story in today's Chicago Tribune talking about the possibility of Senator Barack Obama running for president in 2008, and you're quoted in that story, Senator, as saying I hope he will seriously consider it. Would you like to see Senator Obama run?

DURBIN: I will tell you this. You have to witness Senator Barack Obama in my state of Illinois, from southern Illinois through the Chicago suburbs, into the city, and across the United States to understand that this man brings something special to American politics.

He connects with people better than anyone I've ever seen. He is the number-one person sought after to speak at Democratic events across the United States of America. I think he has dramatic potential to unite this country, both red and blue. And yes, I'm encouraging him. But ultimately, it's his personal decision with his wife and...

WALLACE: You're encouraging him. As the number-two Democrat in the Senate, you're saying you would like to see him run for president.

DURBIN: I can tell you that I've sat down with him and said you ought to look at this long and hard. I know many people are saying wait, and he may decide to wait. But he ought to take a hard look at it.

WALLACE: Would you endorse him if he did run?

DURBIN: Well, let me tell you, Barack Obama is my closest colleague in the United States Senate. We've worked together on everything for the state of Illinois. And if he makes a plan to move forward, I'm going to be at his side.

WALLACE: Senator Durbin, we want to thank you for talking 2006, 2008. Thanks for coming in. Please come back.

DURBIN: Thanks, Chris. Thank you.

WALLACE: Coming up, our Sunday panel on the political showdown between the White House, the Justice Department and Capitol Hill over the search of a congressman's office. You won't want to miss it.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

REP. DENNIS HASTERT (R-IL), SPEAKER: We're going to protect the prerogatives of the House as far as the Constitution, and we think those materials ought to be returned.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SEN. JEFF SESSIONS (R-AL): No one is above the law in this country. This should not be characterized as a raid.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: That was Speaker of the House Hastert and Senator Sessions, two Republicans disagreeing about the controversial seizing of documents from a congressional office.

And it's panel time now for Brit Hume, Washington managing editor of Fox News, and Fox News contributors Nina Easton of Fortune Magazine, Bill Kristol of The Weekly Standard, and Juan Williams from National Public Radio.

Well, the controversy over the raid of Congressman William Jefferson's office last weekend just kept getting richer and richer this week with, as we heard, congressional leaders demanding that all of the records that were seized be returned.

We had two top Justice Department officials -- you can see them right there, the attorney general and the FBI director -- reportedly saying that they would resign if those records were returned to Congressman Jefferson, and the president stepping in to impose a 45-day cooling off period. The records are now being sealed in a Funk & Wagnall jar on -- whatever. I don't know -- what Johnny Carson used to say.

In any case, Brit, what do you make of it all?

BRIT HUME, FOX NEWS WASHINGTON MANAGING EDITOR: Well, it's glorious fun to watch. This is the stuff we live for around Washington. Here you've got this congressman who brought new meaning or real meaning to the term cold cash with 90 grand tucked away in tinfoil and food boxes in his freezer. The FBI thought hmm, maybe something's wrong here, maybe we ought to look in his office. The judge said OK. Dennis Hastert loses his temper about it, in effect, and starts talking through his hat about what the law provides and separation of powers. There isn't a legal authority anywhere who says this was on infirm constitutional ground.

But politically, it's another matter. The administration might have been able to notify leaders on the Hill that this was coming. They might have been able to bring the sergeant at arms or the other officials of the House of Representatives into it and thereby have avoided the ruffled feathers, but that's about all we're dealing with here, is ruffled feathers.

And the demand that the documents be returned strikes me as truly absurd. If this is evidence in a criminal investigation, you don't go give it back. So I think that those people in the Justice Department, the attorney general and the director of the FBI and others, perhaps, who threatened to quit were on solid ground.

The president, I think, may get some credit here for a rather deft defusing of the issue with the Taft-Hartley injunction on the whole cooling off period on the whole thing.

WALLACE: Nina?

NINA EASTON, BOSTON GLOBE: Well, the letter that went out to House Republicans from the leadership probably said it best. The opening line of that was is this a smart battle to fight. Perhaps not. And I think it's probably a battle that even Dick Durbin suggests they're going to lose constitutionally.

Secondly, Democrats handed -- as Brit suggested, they handed -- on a silver platter this case was handed to Republicans, this guy who was videotaped taking a bribe.

WALLACE: We should say allegedly.

EASTON: Allegedly -- yes, these are all allegations. Innocent until proven guilty. However, the alleged crimes are so egregious that Democrats are distancing themselves big time. But this was handed to the republicans.

This was a chance to turn around that party of corruption moniker that the Democrats are trying to stick on them this election year, and Denny Hastert, perhaps with the aid of overzealous FBI agents, managed to turn this into a split between House Republicans and the White House.

WALLACE: Bill, we usually refer to you as General Kristol. I'm now going to refer to you as Mr. Justice Kristol.

BILL KRISTOL, WEEKLY STANDARD: There you go.

WALLACE: Is there no legal basis for concern by congressional leaders? And let me flip it around. What if Congress were investigating a president and they got a court order? Could Capitol Hill police march down to the White House and go in and search the president's files?

KRISTOL: Well, actually, the president can't defy court orders. I think that was the Nixon precedent. Look, there's some separation of powers.

WALLACE: But I mean, it went to the Supreme Court.

KRISTOL: Right.

WALLACE: They didn't just sit there, the Capitol Hill police, with a court order and go into the White House.

KRISTOL: Right. There's no, as I understand it, sort of legal doctrine that lawmakers' offices are somehow sacrosanct. They do have the ability to say what they want on the floor of the House or the Senate. That's a different matter. This seems to have been executed carefully in terms of the FBI search.

So I think on legal grounds, the FBI and the Justice Department seem to be in pretty good shape. Hastert seems to have overreacted.

Maybe it was all a brilliant plot by Karl Rove. I was thinking about this. You know, we now have had four days of news about a Democratic congressman having $90,000 in his freezer and being under investigation for corruption, and it's a phony battle.

I think Hastert and Gonzales and Rove worked this all out in private last week. No, really, why not? I mean, Nina says well, this looks bad for Hastert. No, but look. What are we talking about here? We're talking about a Democratic congressman's corruption, not Abramoff's. So I think it was a very smart move by the Republicans. * JUAN WILLIAMS, NPR: Are you serious?

KRISTOL: No.

WILLIAMS: I just wanted to check.

WALLACE: As a politician once said to me, we're not that smart.

WILLIAMS: Exactly. Right. I mean, the one part of this story that I think we haven't picked up on is that I think that in a sense what we're watching is a proxy fight where you have Republicans on the face of it seeming to defend this congressman who's had two people already plead guilty to bribing him, and now the investigation goes forward.

But what you have is I think Denny Hastert and other Republicans worry that the FBI, that Justice, are going to next go after them in much the same way, and it may be their offices next.

HUME: You mean because of the Abramoff investigation.

WILLIAMS: Because of the Abramoff investigation and the sense that Justice and the FBI regard, you know, political contributions as bribes. And if that's the case, then a lot of what we've seen in the Jack Abramoff case may have tremendous resonance going forward. It may create additional problems. So they don't want the FBI just tracking around doing whatever they want.

And the second thing to say is, you know, there is something to be said as a matter of constitutional principle for keeping the executive branch away from the congressional branch -- I mean, the legislative branch. They shouldn't have a right to spend -- those guys went in there around 7 o'clock.

WALLACE: Eighteen hours.

WILLIAMS: And they were there until Sunday afternoon, from Saturday night to Sunday afternoon. And said they had a filter, but they didn't invite any officials of the House to participate. They didn't inform them.

I just think, you know, they stepped across a line, and it invites people then to say oh, the House of Representatives will let them tap your phones and have secret prisons, but once they start looking at the Congress, oh, then all of a sudden they're in a big dither. I mean, it looks like hypocrisy.

WALLACE: Brit, as I said, the story kept getting richer, because as the week went on, ABC News reported that Speaker Hastert, who was raising such a fuss about this FBI raid, was, in fact, the subject of a criminal -- or involved in a criminal investigation.

HUME: Included in.

WALLACE: Included. Well, we'll get to that in a second. And Hastert then fired back and suggested that this was a purposeful leak to try to intimidate him from his fight with the Justice Department. Let's listen to this exchange.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ROSS: Federal officials tell us the congressional bribery investigation now includes the speaker of the house, Dennis Hastert.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

HASTERT: This is one of the leaks that come out to try to, you know, intimidate people and we're just not going to be intimidated.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: What do you think of the ABC story? What do you think of Hastert's charge that there was some connection between that story and the fact that he was upset about the FBI raid?

HUME: Well, there's no way to speak for Hastert's allegation, because we don't know who the official was, the unidentified official in the Justice Department, which could include the FBI, that gave this information to ABC News. ABC News has now fallen back on the idea that well, we really didn't quite say he was the target of an investigation, we just said he was in the mix, that he was included, and they quoted their source in a subsequent story as saying you worded it very carefully, but people aren't reading it very carefully.

Look, ABC News came out with this story, worded the way it was. Included in the investigation, in the mix of the investigation, has an unmistakable implication, and that is the guy's under investigation.

We have now had an absolutely equivocal denial of that, not only from the Justice Department at one level, but when this Business about what well, what about being in the mix came along, Paul McNulty, the U.S. attorney, came out and denied that as well.

This looks like a bad story. They led their newscast with it. The implication was unmistakable. They ought to back off this story, and the sooner the better.

WALLACE: Memo to ABC News.

Nina, let me ask you, though, about the political fallout side of this. I mean, the fact is the president has got a lot of business he wants to do with Congress. Do you see a fallout? Is this going to make it harder for him to do business with the House and with Speaker Hastert?

EASTON: Absolutely. I mean, this continues -- it's going to make it harder to do business on the immigration bill. James Sensenbrenner, the head of the House Judiciary Committee, who opposes the immigration bill, by the way, next week is doing a hearing on this FBI raid matter.

WALLACE: I think he's given it the title reckless justice.

EASTON: Reckless justice. I mean, I think that says it all.

KRISTOL: I disagree. The president has had a pretty good few weeks here. He got house cuts through both houses of Congress and signed that bill.

He's got an immigration bill through the Senate that a month ago everyone said oh, it's going to blow up, they can never have a bipartisan coalition.

And now all you can read in the -- he gets a huge legislative victory and all you can read is the president's problems with the House. There are some problems with the House. But the fact is he has made more progress than anyone expected on key legislative issues in the last month.

He got a judge confirmed Friday, Brett Kavanaugh of the D.C. circuit. General Hayden -- there was supposed to be a great uproar over that. You know, the NSA program was going to make it impossible for him to be confirmed. He's confirmed overwhelmingly. I think the president's doing pretty well.

WALLACE: All right. We need to take a break here. But coming up, the Senate OKs its version of immigration reform. What are the chances a deal can be made with the House? Some answers when we return.

WALLACE: On this day in 2003, President Bush signed a $350 billion tax cut to increase the pace of economic recovery and job creation. It is the third largest tax cut in U.S. history. Stay tuned for more from our panel and our Power Player of the Week.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KENNEDY: America will be a stronger, fairer, more just place.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SANTORUM: This legislation, I think, is well outside of what I would consider responsible reform. It's misfocused.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: That's a small slice of the political divide that exists on Capitol Hill over immigration reform.

And we're back now with Brit, Nina, Bill and Juan. It's been suggested that what we're seeing here now in immigration and particularly with the compromise -- or the conference, rather, coming between the House and the Senate is a battle for the future of the Republican Party between the George W. Bush brand of compassionate conservatives and the more traditional law and order, enforcement-only side that we're seeing in the House.

WALLACE: Juan, what do you think is at stake for the Republican Party in what's going to happen now in the conference?

WILLIAMS: As I said last week, I think the president had been building a relationship with the Hispanic community that was going to pay off politically. But in terms of the conference, what he's got to hope is that somehow that the people in the House who have been the hard-liners, the ones who want to build walls, the ones who are, I think, on the wrong side of history here, will realize that it's in the party's best interest to have something of a compromise.

For instance, in the bill that the Senate approved this week you have a situation where they're going to provide for guest workers. But you can do that if you've been here five years or longer.

If you've been here two to five years, you still have to leave the country and go apply for a green card. And if you've been here less than two years, you just have to leave. You just can't do anything.

Imagine trying to get these two to three -- it might be four million people who have been here two years or less out of the country, much less in the House version getting 11 million or 12 million people out of the country. It's not practical, not workable, and it's going to hurt the Republican Party.

So that's the argument that they've got to make in the conference.

WALLACE: Brit, I want to -- before we get into specifics, I want to go back to sort of the bigger, overarching issue. Do you see a kind of divide here on where the Republican Party is going? I mean, is that the overarching issue?

HUME: Yes, I do, and I think that it comes down to really the short-term politics and long-term politics. The short-term politics are all running against the idea of a path to citizenship in particular.

The guest worker program isn't wildly popular either, but it's much more popular. The path to citizenship is what gives rise to the epithet that it's amnesty, and that is what the public is so outraged by.

And I think the -- also, the sense of laxness on the border which, you know, people overwhelmingly sense, feel, is a powerful force here, too. So the momentum politically is in favor of much tougher enforcement, and a lot of people would say that's all that needs to be done now.

I think in the long-term, however, if the Republican Party ends up being seen as the party that wouldn't support this vast and growing segment of our population -- namely, the Hispanics -- then I think that's long-term big trouble for the Republican Party.

The Democrats are in a situation where they can kind of, you know, lie down in the tall grass and wait and see what happens here.

WALLACE: Nina, I mean, let's talk about -- because we are going to get this fascinating thing, and according to Frist, we're going to see it pretty soon, this House-Senate conference.

You've got Sensenbrenner, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, the lead negotiator, saying no earned legalization at all, non-starter, forget it. Obviously, there are an awful lot of people, I think the majority in the Senate, who are going to demand that. Is there a basis for a compromise there?

EASTON: Well, I think what -- let's step back and look at what's happening in the House first. The House Republicans, vulnerable House Republicans, are hearing a very vocal segment of their constituents adamantly opposed to any kind of path to citizenship.

They want border security. Even a Chris Shays, a centrist...

WALLACE: Now, tell where he's from.

EASTON: ... from Connecticut, sort of centrist, northeastern Republican -- even he is saying he's hearing from constituents we don't want a path to citizenship, we want border security.

You have nervous Republicans. You have that combined with House Speaker Hastert saying I'm not going to bring a bill forward unless a majority of Republicans are behind it.

So I think even coming out of the House, what you're probably going to have is a bill that addresses border security but does not address this question of what to do with the 12 million immigrants here, illegal immigrants here.

WALLACE: You think that's the result of the conference.

EASTON: And I do think that that will -- that could be the result of the conference, that they kick the longer-term issue to a non-election year and they do just focus on border security.

WALLACE: And do you think the Senate would pass that?

EASTON: If you took out things like making it a felony to be here, the making it a crime to help immigrants here -- if you take out some of those pieces of the House, you know, what else -- I don't see the House compromising. WALLACE: Bill, let me ask you to role-play again. You're not general. You're not justice. You're a Republican congressman running for re-election in a district, and which is better for you, to have a comprehensive package that has tough border enforcement, but has some of these other things that aren't so palatable, or just have no bill at all?

KRISTOL: Unequivocally, to have legislation, I believe. It would be crazy to go home without a bill, I think. I think Chris Shays' -- you know, if Chris Shays' wealthy Connecticut constituents prefer having illegal immigrants working for them as gardeners so they can pay them less than letting these people have a path to citizenship, let them defend that principle.

What is the principle in which you say we have 11 million people here, and we employ them, and we pay FICA taxes for them, and they pay their taxes, and then, what, they don't have any chance to apply for citizenship? I think it's crazy. I think...

KRISTOL: ... they need to stand up to their base.

I disagree that the politics of this -- if House Republicans want to listen to the 5 percent or 10 percent or 15 percent of the people who stand up at town meetings and yell and scream about the national anthem is being sung in Spanish, oh, my God -- that was a big controversy, wasn't that, two or three weeks ago?

Fox News alert, someone is singing the national anthem in Spanish...

WALLACE: Let's not make fun of Fox News alerts, now.

KRISTOL: Someone is singing the national anthem in Spanish, oh, my God. I think they need to stand up on this one and pass sensible, comprehensive legislation.

HUME: The thing I think you need to watch going forward here is how they can craft a compromise on the path to citizenship that might fly. I think the House would accept a guest worker program as long as the border enforcement provisions were tough enough.

The path to citizenship is the sticking point. If it could be redrawn so that an alien would have to go home first, that might be good enough. But if they can't fix that, it won't be -- I don't think it can be in any final bill that could pass the...

WALLACE: Thirty seconds left. Better to have comprehensive if you're a Republican congressman or no bill at all?

WILLIAMS: Oh, better to have comprehensive, especially looking down the path. But I mean, you know, we had American Idol and the big vote this week. Republicans will stay home if you don't say that this Congress can do something, even if it's a flawed bill, but get something done. And that's why the president's going to intervene. You watch. The president's going to play a bigger role.

WALLACE: Thank you, panel. That's it for today. See you all next week.

Time now for some mail, first about Senator John McCain's comments that his support for South Carolina's confederate flag back in 2000 was an act of political cowardice.

Brian Daly from Florida praised McCain. "It was absolutely fantastic to witness a politician clearly admit to a mistake."

But Joe Green from Alabama had a different reaction. "Whether it's inconsistency or plain old expediency, Senator McCain's got it bad. How could it be wrong for South Carolina to decide which flag flies but right for South Carolina and 49 other states to be required to decide the question of homosexual marriage?"

Up next, our Power Player of the Week.

WALLACE: On this Memorial Day weekend, America pauses to remember those who died serving our nation. At Arlington National Cemetery, honoring our fallen heroes is the full-time job of our Power Player of the Week.

STAFF SGT ALFRED LANIER, U.S. ARMY: To me, I think it's a privilege to have the honor to be able to guard the unknowns because that's something that I can give back to my country.

WALLACE: Army Staff Sergeant Alfred Lanier is one of the leaders of the honor guard at the Tomb of the Unknowns. If he seems soft-spoken, just watch him do his job.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

LANIER: Ladies and gentlemen, may I have your attention, please? In keeping with the dignity of this ceremony, it is requested that everyone remain silent and standing.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

WALLACE: Twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year, a platoon of 30 guards the tomb honoring unidentified soldiers from the first and second world wars and Korea. The ceremony is simple yet powerful. A relief commander, like Lanier, changes the guard. Then a single sentinel keeps vigil. He walks 21 steps, pauses 21 seconds, and walks back. Twenty-one, as in a 21-gun salute, is the military's highest honor.

LANIER: Once you step on the plaza, you're counting every step you take. Every second is a count. So you have to be precise about it. You can almost go outside and change the guard blindfolded after you do it so many times.

WALLACE: Guards walk their post for an hour in winter, for a half hour in the blistering heat.

What are you wearing in the dead of summer?

LANIER: One hundred percent wool.

WALLACE: How hot does that get?

LANIER: You get pretty hot.

WALLACE: Do you ever think to yourself why are we going through all this trouble?

LANIER: Not really. We're going to give them the best that we can. And that's what we're doing.

WALLACE: They're just as meticulous behind the scenes. Guards pull a 27-hour shift, walking their post a dozen times, then get ready to do it all over again. They steam their jackets, then put back every piece of brass precisely measured. Just shining their shoes takes four hours.

LANIER: You shine it from the base with Kiwi, Kiwi and water, everything from the sole all the way up. You shine it up.

WALLACE: Lanier, who has been a guard more than four years, prides himself on their dedication. In September 2003, with Hurricane Isabel bearing down on Washington, Lanier was told he could take shelter.

Did you leave your post?

LANIER: No, sir.

WALLACE: Wasn't the wind whipping around at 60-plus miles an hour?

LANIER: Two trees fell on the north end, the south end of the plaza. But they did not endanger my life or the life of the sentinels that was there.

WALLACE: Lanier says Memorial Day is always a special time to stand guard.

LANIER: While you're on post, the veterans will be talking to you, telling you thank you for what you're doing, because they lost a lot of friend in those major campaigns that we had.

WALLACE: The tombs have been guarded every minute of every day since 1937. How long do you think this will go on?

LANIER: The tomb will be guarded. The unknowns will be guarded. There will be a vigil pulled until we can identify each remains.

WALLACE: And if that goes on forever?

LANIER: There will be guards out there forever.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

WALLACE: Four million people a year watch the changing of the guard at the Tomb of the Unknowns. If you haven't been there, be sure to include it on your next trip to Washington.

And that's it for us. Have a great holiday. We'll see you next "Fox News Sunday". But as we say goodbye, a special heartfelt thank you to those who have given their lives for our country.

CBS – FACE THE NATION

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

Today on FACE THE NATION, Republicans fighting among themselves, Democrats trying to find an agenda that goes beyond criticizing Republicans. What is going to happen in the midterm elections now just five months away?

President Bush's poll numbers are the lowest ever, Congress is mired in partisan fighting, and who speaks for the Democrats? As the war goes on and gas prices go up, will there be a turnover in Congress? Thirty-three Senate seats are at risk this fall and every seat in the House of Representatives.

We'll talk about it with the top strategist for Democratic Senate candidates, Chuck Schumer of New York, and Kentucky's Mitch McConnell, the number two Republican in the Senate. Elisabeth Bumiller of The New York Times will join in the questions, and I'll have a final word on Memorial Day. Have we forgotten what it means?

But first, the Senate midterms on FACE THE NATION.

Announcer: FACE THE NATION with CBS News chief Washington correspondent Bob Schieffer. And now, from CBS News in Washington, Bob Schieffer.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

And good morning again on this Memorial Day, which aside from its official meaning, is sort of the start of summer and the unofficial beginning of the fall campaigns.

And to talk about that this morning from Louisville, Kentucky, the Assistant Majority Leader Mitch McConnell from the Senate and, from New York City, Senator Chuck Schumer, the number one strategist for the Democratic Senate candidates. Joining in our questioning this morning, Elisabeth Bumiller, the White House correspondent of The New York Times.

Senator McConnell, let me start with you. Republicans are fighting among themselves in a way I haven't seen in quite a while. The war is going on, those gas prices are up, the Veterans Administration has found a way to let 27 1/2 million veterans--have found a way to let their records, including their Social Security numbers, to be stolen. The former speaker of the House, Mitch--Newt Gingrich, said the other day that Democrats didn't really need an agenda anymore, that really all they had to say is, 'Had enough?' I want to ask you, are you going to be able to hold your majorities in the Senate and the House this year?

Senator MITCH McCONNELL (Republican, Kentucky; Assistant Majority Leader): Well, we're certainly going to hold a majority in the Senate. It has been a challenging period. The president's numbers are much lower than we would like. But it's important to remember, Bob, that we only have one retirement, one open seat in Tennessee, which is a pretty red state. And if you look back at 1994, which I know is the year the Democrats are hoping will be similar, what maybe they can expect in 2006, it was indeed the best Republican congressional election of the 20th century, and we did regain the House and Senate. But on the Senate side, we only beat two incumbents. All the rest the changes were in open seats. We only have one retirement this year, as I indicated, in Tennessee. About as good a place to have an open seat from a Republican point of view as possible. Could the Democrats get back the Senate? They could. They'd have to win the open seat in Tennessee, would have to knock off five incumbents and would have to count on us not winning anywhere else where they currently occupy the seat. I'm not saying it's impossible, but if I were a betting man, I'd bet that the Senate's going to be in Republican hands after the November election.

SCHIEFFER: Now, I noticed you did say that we think we can hold it in the Senate. Senators sometimes don't like to talk about what's going on in the House, but what do you see going on in the House of Representatives right now? Do you think it is in danger of being captured by the Democrats?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, I just don't think that I'm an expert on all of these House districts. There are 435 of them. I keep reading, as you do, that they--the Republican--Republicans should be able to hold the districts. That there are fewer competitive districts than in the past. And, after all, at the end of the day, people have to decide whether they like their own member of Congress. I'll give you an example. Right here in Louisville, Kentucky, my hometown where I am today, there is a Democrat-leaning district that's been held by a Republican, who's extraordinarily effective, for 10 years. I think there's virtually no chance that the Democrats could knock off our popular local Republican congresswoman because she's done a great job.

SCHIEFFER: OK.

Sen. McCONNELL: And it seems to be that's the challenge that they have over in the House side.

SCHIEFFER: Well, OK. Let's get Chuck Schumer's take on all this.

What do you think's going to happen, Senator?

Senator CHUCK SCHUMER (Democrat, New York; Chairman, Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee): Well, I think that we're going to do very, very well. The American people want change and new direction. They want a change because they see that basically this administration has been incompetent, whether it's on Katrina, or Dubai Ports World, or Medicare Part D or the war in Iraq. They see an administration that seems to substitute ideology and cronyism for competence. And they see a Congress that simply rubber stamps everything the administration does.

We Democrats have a new direction and we are going to change things should we get into power. We're going to do six things right away. First, we're going to pass a tougher--tougher ethics bill. Second, we're going to pass a real energy bill that does what the people need, not the oil companies, so we'll have energy independence. Third, we're going to restore tuition deductibility so that middle class families can pay for college, something the Republicans just took away. Fourth, we're going to have a good Medicare Part D program so people can get prescription drugs and the bill will be much more aimed at the average recipient than the insurance companies and pharmaceutical companies. Fifth, we want to improve our armed forces. We want more special forces. We want to double them. And we want better intelligence so we can get the terrorists before they get us. And finally, stem cell research, so that families who have members suffering from Alzheimer's or juvenile diabetes can get some relief. For all those reasons, we're doing very well. In fact, while we do have a tough map, Mitch is right, the Republicans are not ahead in a single blue state, if you look at the polls, and we are even or ahead in five of theirs. So it's a long way to the election, but if you held a snapshot today, it would be 50/50.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well, let's go to Elisabeth.

Ms. ELISABETH BUMILLER (The New York Times): Senator Schumer, some Democrats are talking about if they--if you win in 2006, that there's a lot of talk of subpoena power and that the Democrats will spend their last two years of the Bush administration investigating. Is that kind of talk going to put off some moderates, perhaps? Do you agree...

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, I don't think that's what Democrats want to do in either the House or Senate, Elisabeth.

Ms. BUMILLER: Nancy Pelosi has said so recently.

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, she has said that she wants to focus on the things that I've talked about. We're going to focus on better ethics and better energy, better education, better health care, better security, and stem cell research. We know that people want real change. They don't want partisan fighting. They don't want investigating. They want to make their lives a little bit better. And the Republicans, led by George Bush and then a rubber stamp Congress that does just what he want, haven't done that. That's why 60 percent of all Republicans say they want--I mean 60 percent of all people say they want change, even a significant number of Republicans. And that's what we're going to do. We know--the door is open, because people don't like what the president and the Republican Congress are doing, but we're not going to walk through it unless we have a good platform, the kind that I outlined.

Ms. BUMILLER: Do you--who do you see as the most vulnerable Democrats in this--in November?

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, we're doing amazingly well. When the election started in 2005, we had six incumbents. They've targeted in every case the candidate that the Republican National Committee wanted to recruit, their number one candidate didn't run. Of those six incumbents, one doesn't even have an opponent of much note, Kent Conrad, and the other five are ahead by more than 10 points. The idea that the races are going to just be anti-incumbency is wrong, because our incumbents, as I said, are ahead by 10 or more, and their incumbents are even or behind in a good number of the races.

SCHIEFFER: Well, Senator McConnell, let me ask you about this whole business of immigration, which is--has not just caused a huge gulf of difference between Republicans and Democrats, but it's split up Republicans. I'm told this morning that 75 percent of the Republicans in the House now oppose any kind of amnesty or any kind of program that leads to citizenship for illegal aliens that are al--or illegal immigrants that are already in this country. Yet that is what the president, something similar to that, that's what the president wants. Is this going to play a role in these elections? And, in fact, do you believe that there's going to be an immigration bill at the end of the day that contains any of that?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, I think there's--I hope there's going to be an immigration bill that's heavily weighted toward securing the borders. My personal view is that a comprehensive approach is better, but if we cannot get a bill between the House and Senate that adequately deals with border security, I don't think there will be a bill. I'd rather have one, and I'd rather have a guest worker program that works. This is going to be a hard conference. And, Bob, if I may, just briefly, you were asking about the Democratic agenda, and Chuck--it's good to hear Chuck talking about it. We intend to talk about the Democratic agenda this fall, too, because Americans have forgotten what they do when they're in the majority. I can tell you what they'll do. They'll rave--wave the white flag in the war on terror, they'll raise taxes, and they'll try to censure the president in the Senate and impeach the president in the House. This is what their agenda really is. And the American people, after all, in the fall, will have a choice. It isn't going to just be a referendum on Republicans. It's going to be a choice between Republicans and what we've done and the Democrats and what they would do if they were in the majority for the last two years of the Bush presidency.

SCHIEFFER: Well, what about that, Senator Schumer?

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, here's the bottom line, and this is how the election will play out. Democrats are talking about things that will make people's lives better, that affect the average voter, whether it's gas prices or education or health care. And, you know, the Republican Party, whether it's the president or the Senate leadership, doesn't have anything to say other than these sort of fear tactics aimed at Democrats. Now, it's not going to work. It's not going to work for a couple of reasons. First, because we have a real agenda. Second, because the Democratic Party over the years has become a mainstream party, and we're much closer. On the immigration bill, where Mitch and I voted on the same--this is an example--Mitch and I voted for the same bill, a balanced, tough bill. Yes, tough borders and, yes, no amnesty, but a path to earned citizenship. But they're busy fighting with each other. They're spending so much time trying to secure their base that we're able to reach out to mainstream Republicans in the middle.

And I'll tell you one interesting thing, and this has happened over and over. I got a call from a fellow, suburbs of Denver, telecom exec. He said, 'I'm a conservative Republican. I voted for Bush in '04, I'm voting for the Republican in '08. But let me know how I can help. We need some balance in this government, and we need change in direction.'

Ms. BUMILLER: Senator...

Sen. McCONNELL: Bob...

Ms. BUMILLER: Senator McConnell, let me just ask you, do you--how much do the president's low approval numbers--he's hovering in the low 30s right now--how much does that affect these races?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, it's not helpful. I can see it's not helpful. We'd certainly like for the president to be in better shape.

You know, what Chuck and his colleagues are doing in the Senate is block and blame. This week in Roll Call, one of our Capitol Hill newspapers--I'm just holding up a copy here to illustrate the point--Chuck and Harry Reid were telling the Democrats don't co-sponsor any bills with Republicans who are in hard races. That gives you a sense of what's coming. They don't want to cooperate. They want to block progress and try to blame us. It's not going to work. Block and blame didn't work in '02, block and blame didn't work in '04, and block and blame won't work in '06.

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, let me just say here that the American people want change. They want a new direction. And Mitch says we're blocking progress. We are--yes, we are standing up to George Bush when he's doing the wrong thing. And 60 percent of Americans, a little more than 60, think he is not doing the right thing either on domestic policy, where for a long while they thought that, or even foreign policy, which they haven't. So I think we're doing two things. Yes, we're standing up to George Bush when he's wrong, but we are also putting forward a positive platform on education and health care and all these other issues that will make America's lives better. And that's why Democrats are doing well, and that's why we're going to do well in the election.

SCHIEFFER: Senator McConnell, what do you think it will come down to in the poll? Will it be the war in Iraq? Will it be the corruption that Washington finds itself engulfed in? Will it be this immigration thing? What do you think will be the overriding issue in these campaigns?

Sen. McCONNELL: Well, the ethics issues that have developed, which are certainly disturbing, are totally bipartisan in nature. I don't think that's an issue that, frankly, advantages either side. I think where we have popular incumbents running for re-election, Bob, in all likelihood the key thing is going to be whether their constituents feel that they've done a good job representing the state and the nation. And this notion that somehow bipartisanship will come about with Democratic majorities is belied by the fact that, in the Senate, the whole strategy during most of the Bush administration is to encourage Democratic senators not to cooperate on anything.

SCHIEFFER: Well, are you saying then that the war is not going to be a factor?

Sen. McCONNELL: I think the war does have a dampening effect on the overall popularity of the president. On the other hand, individual members of the Senate do not dictate the strategy in the war. And also, we're going to be reminding Americans that we haven't been attacked again here at home since 9/11. It's not an accident. It's not a quirk of fate. It's because we've been on offense going after the people who would do us harm in Afghanistan and in Iraq. And we're going to remind people that, even though the going has been difficult in Iraq, as a result of fighting these kind of people where they are, we haven't had to fight them in Washington and New York. The absence of attack here at home is success.

SCHIEFFER: All right, is that--does that argument work, Senator Schumer?

Sen. SCHUMER: No, absolutely not. If you look, the American people see there's really no plan in Iraq. There's no light at the end of the tunnel. We're told 18 months ago that we're going to turn over the policing duties and the military duties to the Iraqi armed forces, and they can't do the job at all. We don't have body armor for our troops, either on their bodies or their humvees. And what the Democrats have done, and this is what we should do, we are holding the president accountable. As the opposition party in Congress, we're saying, 'Where is your plan?' That's why we were able to force the Senate to pass a resolution of accountability back in November, which got about 79 votes. The war is going to be a real problem for the president because he simply has not persuaded the American people that he has any path, any light at the end of the tunnel, while Democrats are doing what our job is, which is to hold the president accountable on these issues.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well I have to thank both of you this morning. We'll stop there. Obviously this is the discussion that's going to go on right up until Election Day.

We'll be back with a little round table to talk about it some more in just a minute. Thank you.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

And we're back again with Elisabeth Bumiller, the White House correspondent for The New York Times for what? The last five years, Elisabeth?

Ms. ELISABETH BUMILLER (The New York Times): Almost five.

SCHIEFFER: And you're getting ready to go off on book leave now to write a book about Condoleezza Rice. I'd just like to get your thoughts about your observations over these past five years watching the Bush administration. And I must say, this week I found it extraordinary that the president went before a news conference with Tony Blair and said, 'You know, maybe I used kind of the wrong language when I was talking about "bring 'em on," and Osama bin Laden dead or alive.' Now we know Laura Bush has corrected him for some of those...

Ms. BUMILLER: Right.

SCHIEFFER: ...tough things he's said in the past, but he seemed genuinely regretful that he has said them--these things. What do you make of this?

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, it's the second term; he's in a very weakened political position. He took enormous political hits also in the first term when--I remember there was a press conference in April of 2004 when he was asked, 'Can you think of any mistakes you've made?' and he couldn't think of a thing. And this is a little like the husband who can never admit he was wrong. But he took a lot of hits for that.

And I also think, at the time, he thought that admitting a mistake in the midst of a re-election campaign was just going to be fodder for John Kerry. Now he's two--he's two years out, you know, and--and I also think it reflects what--what he has said in private. And his friends say that he's much more reflective about the last three years in private than he has ever been publicly.

SCHIEFFER: So you don't think--and it's hard to ascribe motives to anyone--this was not something he had planned out. This is just something--this is sort of how he feels now?

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, it was also something he's planned out. Let's be--let's be honest here. He ever--ever since he couldn't answer that question in 2004, the White House has--has prepared for the question coming up again, and I think that he certainly had a ready answer. It came out very quickly. And a lot of his critics have said that, 'What's the big deal? He was just admitting mistakes about language. He was not admitting mistakes, say, that they would say about disbanding the Iraqi Army or was Jerry Bremer the right person for the job.'

SCHIEFFER: Or going into Iraq...

Ms. BUMILLER: Going in at all, right.

SCHIEFFER: ...in--in the first place.

I want to ask you also about this rather unusual situation that developed when the FBI went in and searched the office of a congressman, a Democratic congressman, and I must say there's no sympathy that I can find around Washington for him. This man was photographed taking a $100,000 payoff given to him by an FBI undercover agent. But the FBI went into his Capitol Hill office with a federal court order and searched it, and the Congress is in just a complete uproar, demanding that--that the first time that the FBI has ever gone into a congressman's office. Apparently the speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert, went to the president. As a result of that, the president sealed the documents that the FBI got. But we're also told that his own attorney general and the FBI director threatened to resign if--if he had told the FBI to give those documents back. Where does this--where does this all end?

Ms. BUMILLER: I don't know. He's given the 45-day cooling off period. I think the president had to weigh--he weighed in. It was extraordinary that he weighed in himself and said let's--and he made a decision that we were going to wait. It shows, I think, first of all, that he again is a little weakened politically because he was trying to placate a very angry Congress. For the last five years, this is a president who has pushed the powers of the presidency to new--to new limits--to new--without limit, and Congress is tired of it. But the other thing that I--I noticed that Senator Schumer has said over the weekend was that--was that, you know, this had been going on for five years and--with the American people, but when it hits home in Congress, then when it directly affects members of Congress, then there's an uproar.

SCHIEFFER: Now, where does this immigration situation--do you think there's an end? Do you think there's going to be a bill in the end? Congressman Sensenbrenner, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the House said this morning that flatly there will not be a bill if it includes any kind of a program that can be described as amnesty or if it provides this path to citizenship, as the president wants.

Ms. BUMILLER: Well, The New York Times doesn't like it when I predict, and I can obviously--I don't--I just don't have any idea.

SCHIEFFER: Mm-hmm.

Ms. BUMILLER: It looks really tough for the president right now. He is, you know, his--his position is so out of step with--with House Republicans. His--his position is a very centrist position. The House Republicans would say it's very liberal, that he wants to give, you know, some of the 11 million illegal immigrants in this country a chance at citizenship, and certainly allow to stay here on a temp--at least on a temporary basis. So what he's been trying to do, we saw it a week and a half ago, he--he went all the way out to Yuma, Arizona, for the day, stood on the border and said he wanted--he would like to see a fence in parts of the border. He's never talked like that before. He gave a prime-time speech saying he wanted 6,000, you know, additional National Guard troops on the border. This obviously is--is to placate the House. Judging from Sensenbrenner, it doesn't look like it's working so far.

SCHIEFFER: All right. Well, good luck on your book.

Ms. BUMILLER: Thank you.

SCHIEFFER: And we'll be talking to you along the way.

We'll be back with a final word in just a minute.

BOB SCHIEFFER, host:

Finally, every year on the Memorial Day weekend, we hear the words 'This is a time we honor those who have fallen in battle in defense of this country.' But do we really take those words to heart? Do we do anything more than make a mental note, 'Oh yeah. This is when we honor the military people who got killed,' and then head out to the ball game or a picnic? I have an idea that won't interfere with your weekend.

What better way to honor the dead than to remember the wounded? Medical science has improved to the point that thousands upon thousands of young Americans who would have died in previous wars are returning home. But not as God made them, but as war has left them, with horrible injuries. Many are multiple amputees. We cannot yet know if this war will prove worth it, but the one thing we do know is that, years from now, whatever the answer to that question, these young people's arms and legs will not have grown back.

There are many ways to help them, but here are two fine organizations you may want to consider: the Walter Reed Society at www.walterreedsociety.org, which helps families of the wounded meet unexpected financial crises, and the Yellow Ribbon Society at www.YellowRibbonFund.org, which helps families find housing and transportation while service members are in the hospital. I know that all of them will appreciate it.

CNN – LATE EDITION

WOLF BLITZER, HOST: It's 8:00 a.m. here in Los Angeles, 11:00 a.m. in Washington, 7:00 p.m. in Baghdad and 10:00 p.m. in Jakarta, Indonesia. Wherever you're watching from around the world, thanks very much for joining us for "Late Edition."

We'll bring you the latest on the devastating earthquake in Indonesia in just a moment. First, though, let's get a quick check of what's in the news right now, CNN's Fredricka Whitfield joining us from the CNN headquarters. Fred?

(NEWSBREAK)

BLITZER: Thanks very much, Fred.

Let's get some more details now on that severe earthquake in Indonesia, where the death toll is approaching 4,000. Thousands more are injured. Tens of thousands are homeless.

CNN's Dan Rivers is in the quake zone. He's joining us live via video phone from Jakarta. What's the latest on the scene, Dan?

DAN RIVERS, CNN CORRESPONDENT: We spent the day, Wolf, touring some harrowing scenes of destruction.

We've been to villages where 95 percent of the houses have been destroyed or damage, where the wounded are still lying untreated and where people are having to bury their loved ones who've been killed.

They are terrible scenes here in Indonesia, reminiscent, of course, of the tsunami a year and a half ago which I covered as well.

The scale of the destruction is perhaps not as big, the number of deaths, of course, not that big. But nevertheless, there are awful scenes, traumatic scenes for the residents of this province which has been devastated by this earthquake measuring 6.3.

BLITZER: Dan, are the people getting the supplies, the emergency supplies, the food, the water, the medicine that they need, or is that just beginning to come in?

RIVERS: It's only beginning to come in. We saw some Indonesian soldiers out on patrol here, clearly affecting the situation. Obviously, a huge aid operation is beginning to swing into place. A lot of aid agencies were here because they were concerned about a volcano that was going to explode further north, Mount Merapi. That never happened. But because of that, a lot of aid agencies were in the area. So perhaps the situation is better than it could have been, in that a lot of the NGOs are here on site. But clearly, they are overwhelmed by the sheer number of people. I mean, almost 4,000 people are now confirmed dead. And the death toll is rising all the time.

BLITZER: Dan, are they expecting the death toll to rise significantly or is the worst of it, hopefully, just there?

RIVERS: I think the feeling here is that the worst of it has happened now, that a lot of the bodies have now been recovered, certainly the places we visited today.

This is a huge area, by the way, that's been affected, about 80 kilometers across, 50 miles across. But the villages we visited today, they'd already buried most of the dead and were, obviously, clearly very traumatized and saddened by what's happened.

I didn't get the impression that there are a large number of people still waiting to be discovered below the rubble. A lot of the buildings that have collapsed are small houses, single-story houses.

And basically, as soon as you have a quake happen, people came out, they regrouped, they worked out who was missing. And then they, sadly, discovered those who had perished or who were injured.

So, while I think the death toll will rise significantly, I think it will creep up slowly. I think the worst has probably come to light now.

BLITZER: CNN's Dan Rivers, on the scene for us. Dan, we'll check back with you. Thank you.

International relief agencies are already on the ground in Indonesia, And joining us now by phone from Jakarta is Howard Arfin. He's the reporting coordinator for the International Red Cross and Red Crescent. Mr. Arfin, thanks very much for joining us. What are the greatest needs right now?

HOWARD ARFIN, REPORTING COORDINATOR, INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS/RED CRESCENT: Well, we're in a significant mobilization, as you might imagine.

And the immediate needs, as is often the case with this scale of disaster, is to provide safe, clean drinking water so that people don't get unnecessarily further sick from water-borne diseases such as cholera or diarrhea, which is a killer of young children; basic food, when you have your food services disrupted; shelter, which we're beginning to provide for people who are having to sleep outside -- we've already gotten 10,000 blankets distributed and there's more on the way -- and just basic first aid services, which are being provided now by about 400 local Indonesian Red Cross volunteers in the disaster zone.

BLITZER: Are planes able to get in with these emergency supplies? This is a relatively remote area area. ARFIN: Up until late this afternoon, the answer was no. And we got one large emergency field hospital into the Yogyakarta area by truck during last night.

But the government authorities were quick to begin reparations on the airport. And we believe that, within the last couple of hours, the airport has been prepared for the arrival of humanitarian flights, which will mean that some of the large aircraft that we are preparing to ship in more quantities of tents will be available to begin doing that, and beyond that to continue bringing in food and medical supplies by truck.

BLITZER: What is the latest estimate as to the number of people who have been made homeless by this earthquake?

We know about 4,000 have been killed, thousands others injured. What about the numbers of people who are without homes right now?

ARFIN: The numbers that we've been receiving just recently, the United Nations coordination meeting, with figures provided by the government -- and these are very early figures in these very early days -- is about 25,000 homes that have been seriously damaged or in fact destroyed, which represents well over 100,000 people.

And of course, the circumstances are that the entire population is staying out of doors because of the continuing aftershocks. So it is very difficult to determine how many people are just staying out of their homes to avoid further collapse and injury and how many in fact have no homes left to go to.

As things settle down and people return to their homes, we'll have a better idea of how many people actually need temporary shelter.

BLITZER: Howard Arfin is the reporting coordinator for the International Red Cross and Red Crescent.

Good luck to you and all the people who work with you, Mr. Arfin. Thank you very much.

Let's get some more now. The United Nations is stepping in to try to provide relief, as well, to these earthquake victims.

Joining us now by phone from Oslo, Norway is the U.N.'s emergency relief coordinator, Jan Egeland.

Mr. Egeland, thanks very much for joining us. What about the international response?

Is it forthcoming or is it lacking?

JAN EGELAND, U.N. EMERGENCY RELIEF COORDINATOR: There is an enormous international response. Many countries have pledged funds. I think the whole world sees that Indonesia is now struck by its third major catastrophe in just one and a half years: the tsunami, then the earthquake that struck the island of Nias and then this earthquake. There have also been hundreds of other quakes and aftershocks. So Indonesia needs our help. But Indonesia is doing most of the job itself. We should not overestimate the importance of international assistance. What we're doing is complementing what the army is doing, what the Indonesian government is doing.

The president himself is now in the area directing this effort. And of course, this is Indonesian heartland to the extent that this is heavily populated, it has a big infrastructure, and there are much Indonesian supplies there because we were all preparing for a possible outbreak of the volcano in this area. And those supplies are now benefiting the quake victims.

BLITZER: You're coordinating the international relief. How much money have you been committed to so far from the United States, from Europe, from Japan, from other countries, some of the more wealthy countries?

EGELAND: Well, there is already considerable sums initially pledged from North America, from Europe, from Australia, from several Asian nations. We will issue an appeal for our work after we get the report from our assessment teams, who are already in place. We had a plane arriving with coordinators, experts, you know, people who can set up operations coming in yesterday and today.

We had people there who started work because they were there to prepare for the possible volcano outbreak. I think there will be an enormous need for assistance because, yes, there have been perhaps 4,000 killed so far but there will be tens and tens of thousands without a home, and there are already at least three times as many wounded as those -- and injured as those who are confirmed dead.

BLITZER: Are you going to be making your way toward the scene, Mr. Egeland?

EGELAND: That may well be. But I have already teams coming in from the area where we have lots of people working on tsunami relief and the follow-up of the earthquake at Nias last spring. So this is not Aceh tsunami land in the sense that here we have people, we have coordination structures up and running, and the 100 international organizations who are either involved or planning to get involved have gotten a clear message that we need to be well-coordinated in clusters, concentrating on water and sanitation, health, food and emergency shelter.

BLITZER: Jan Egeland is the U.N.'s emergency relief coordinator. Good luck to you. Good luck to all the people involved in this emergency relief operation. Thanks very much for joining us. We're going to have much more on this story coming up throughout "Late Edition." Terrible tragedy unfolding in Indonesia.

Just ahead, though, the new Iraqi government wants security and democracy, but can it control the violent insurgency and the sectarian warfare? Iraq's deputy prime minister, Barham Salih, weighs in live on his country's next steps. And he's interviewed countless newsmakers. Now it's NBC's Tim Russert who's meeting the press. I'll talk with him about President Bush, the upcoming Congressional elections, and his new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers."

Plus, my special conversation with former President Jimmy Carter. He shares some very strong opinions on the nuclear standoff with Iran, human rights and lots more. "Late Edition" continues right after this.

BLITZER: Our web question of the week asks this: Do you agree with the U.S. Senate measure making English the national language of the United States? You can cast your vote. Go to cnn.com/lateedition. We'll have the results at the end of this program.

Straight ahead, with a new Iraqi government in place, what lies ahead for that country? My conversation with Barham Salih, Iraq's deputy prime minister. That's coming up live. You're watching "Late Edition," the last word in Sunday talk.

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer reporting today from Los Angeles. With Iraq's new unity government finally in place, its top priority is trying to bring order and security to the country. But relentless attacks from insurgents, coupled with widespread sectarian violence, is making all of that extremely, extremely difficult.

Joining us now from Baghdad is Iraq's deputy prime minister, the acting national security adviser, Barham Salih. Deputy Prime Minister, welcome back to "Late Edition." A difficult moment in Iraq's history. There is, though, some hope. First of all, what's the latest on the inability, at least so far, to have a permanent defense minister or interior minister? Where does that stand?

BARHAM SALIH, IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER: Well, one can say the search goes on. The difficulty lies in the fact that the prime minister and the government has committed to bringing in two people that will be agreed to by the main parliamentary blocs, people who will be competent and who will be able to work together and with the prime minister, to help with the security file.

These criteria makes it difficult to really narrow down the search. I just spoke to the prime minister, and he's committed to make the decision very soon, and I hope we will bring into the team of the government two competent Iraqis who will help bring about security and help resolve many of the security challenges before us.

BLITZER: I know last weekend when they announced the new government, the hope was within a week there could be a new defense minister and a new interior minister. That week has now come and gone. When do you think there finally will be these appointments? SALIH: My hope is that people outside would understand the scale of the difficulties that we're dealing with, certainly on the security file. There is a turning point in Iraq, and this government is a manifest of Iraq's national unity. For the first time since the fall of Saddam Hussein's regime, we have credible representatives from the Sunni community taking part in the government.

And we have committed as part of that compact to include all communities of Iraq, that the ministers of defense and interior will be agreed to by the main communities. That is a difficult challenge because in this polarized society, there are different views about particularly the issue of security. But the prime minister and the government has committed to this.

And one note of caution. You should not judge Iraqis by timetables that from afar may sound easy to meet. We are dealing with a difficult, difficult political and security challenge, and while we are making progress, we need to overcome these things, and sometimes we need more time than people are willing to give us.

BLITZER: Is it a foregone conclusion, Mr. Minister, that the defense minister will be an Iraqi Sunni and the interior minister, who's in charge of the police and homeland security, if you will, will be a Shia?

SALIH: That, I would say, is a safe bet, a conventional wisdom, generally agreed to principle, but it is not by any means a foregone conclusion.

The searches have been within those parameters, but if a good Shia were to come and be agreed to by the Sunnis to that particular post of defense minister, I'm sure that it would be considered favorably.

But at the moment, the search is within the parameters that you just mentioned but not a foregone conclusion as such.

BLITZER: The British defense secretary said this on Tuesday. Des Browne said, "Armed militias are widespread and a grave threat to the stability of Iraq and the rule of law. Any government, if it is to survive, must establish a monopoly on the use of force. At the moment the Iraqi government clearly lacks this."

Is the new Iraqi government of Prime Minister al-Maliki taking steps already, right now, to disband, to disarm the various militias?

SALIH: The prime minister made this issue a priority. And this is one of the most difficult issues that will face this government and perhaps this government will be judged by.

We know who the terrorists are. And the terrorists are on one side and the rest of the people of Iraq are on the other. Everybody should be united in tracking the terrorists.

But the issue of organized armed groups who are acting outside the state and outside the law are becoming a serious problem for our politics and our society. And we have to deal with it.

The prime minister has committed to taking serious steps in that direction. And all the key parliamentary blocs are supporting him in this mission.

I cannot say that this will be done easily because we have a serious problem in that context and certainly in certain areas of Iraq. But the prime minister and the government are determined and committed to resolving this issue.

We know that it will be a bit difficult, but we are committed to doing so because without that, there will be no stability in Iraq.

BLITZER: Let me play for you what the U.S. ambassador to Iraq, Zalmay Khalilzad, told me last Sunday here on "Late Edition." Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ZALMAY KHALILZAD, U.S. AMBASSADOR TO IRAQ: Well, it's still a challenge, an important challenge.

The prime minister has said, and we agree with him, that those ministries should be occupied by people who are unifiers, that are not people with ties to militias, people who are broadly accepted by the Iraqis.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: This militia issue, clearly a critical issue. I assume you want the Badr militia, the Mahdi militia to be disbanded. What about the Peshmerga?

You're a Kurd. The Peshmerga is the militia of the Kurds in the north, some 70,000 militia members in the Peshmerga.

Will that be disbanded as well?

SALIH: I've just come back from Kurdistan. I was on a short trip to Sulaymaniyah and Erbil. Thank God the situation there is stable and secure because the Peshmergas have been enrolled in the security services, the police.

And in accordance with the Iraqi constitution, there is a provision that every federal region in Iraq can have its regional guards, very much like your National Guards in the United States.

So the Peshmerga is really not an issue in dispute as such. The issue of militias and the issue of bringing in people in charge of the security portfolio that are unifiers and are seen by most Iraqis as competent and non-sectarian will be an important challenge for this government.

And this is why the prime minister really has taken his time and is consulting and consulting. And I hope, at the end of this process, we will bring in people who can do this difficult task. And we'll deal with the issues of militias by laying ahead of us a road map for rehabilitation and reintegration of these people back into public life of Iraqi politics or Iraqi state.

BLITZER: So let me just press you on this point. So there's one standard, as you see it, for the Peshmerga, which will be integrated into the new Iraqi security force, another for the Shiite militias, the Badr militia, the Mahdi militia?

Is that what you're saying? Those militias should be disbanded but not necessarily the Peshmerga?

SALIH: No, I'm not saying that at all. The Peshmerga -- and you have to remember the historical context as well. The Kurdistan regional government has been in existence over the last 14 years. And this issue of militias has been dealt with for almost a decade now. That has been dealt with, by and large.

But even with the Iraqi constitution that was ratified a few months back, there is a single provision calling for the establishment of regional guards, very much like the United States, where you have a national guards for the states.

But these, all military units of Iraq, including the Peshmergas or the regional guards of Kurdistan, will be going back to the same chain of command, ending in Baghdad at the ministry of defense and the prime minister.

BLITZER: Here's what Nouri al-Maliki, the new Iraqi prime minister, said on Wednesday. He said, "Our forces will be able to take over the security file in all Iraqi provinces in a year and a half."

Assuming he's right, what does that say about the U.S. and coalition troop deployment in Iraq?

When do you believe significant numbers of foreign forces in Iraq will start leaving?

SALIH: I will not want to talk about timetables, really, for one fundamental reason. The Iraqi situation is a complex one. And we are dealing with a tough war against international terrorism and the remnants of the Saddam regime.

I think we are making progress. There is significant progress in the way that Iraqi forces are trained and are recruited.

I mean, if you were to compare the situation now compared to where we were a year ago, you will see significant progress.

And I think, if this pace is maintained, we will be seeing more reliance on Iraqi troops and Iraqi security organizations as opposed to the multinational forces.

And I think the challenge for this government and, for that matter, the international coalition will be to place Iraqis in the front to assume security of their own country.

I have reviewed plans that the multinational forces will be handing over full security responsibilities to Iraqi security organizations and police and military in various provinces of Iraq at different parts of the year.

And I think you will see more and more emphasis on Iraqi troops as opposed to multinational forces.

In terms of significant reductions of the American and other forces, this, again, depends on the situation on the ground. But I don't think it will be impossible to see significant reduction in these troops in the foreseeable future. But we should not commit to a specific timetable because we do not want to give the terrorists any hints or any ideas that they can wait us out. This war against international terrorism in Iraq must be won and must be won decisively. Failure is not an option here in Iraq.

BLITZER: Barham Salih is the deputy prime minister of Iraq. You've got a huge challenge ahead of you. Good luck to you. Good luck to all the Iraqi people, Mr. Minister.

SALIH: Thank you.

BLITZER: Thanks very much for joining us on "Late Edition."

And still ahead.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: We're the last word in Sunday talk. You know that, right?

TIM RUSSERT, HOST, MEET THE PRESS: Because if it's Sunday, it's "Meet the Press."

BLITZER: And we're the only one that's seen live around the world in 240 countries.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: A special conversation coming up with my Sunday morning talk show colleague, Tim Russert. He'll talk about his new book, politics in the United States, lots more.

Up next, though, a quick check of what's the news right now, including the latest on the pope's visit to Poland. Stay with us.

(NEWSBREAK)

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting today from Los Angeles. He's a familiar face on Sunday morning for millions of television viewers. That's because, for the past 14 years, Tim Russert has interviewed a host of newsmakers as the moderator and managing editor of NBC's "Meet the Press."

Now he's the author of a powerful new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers." I spoke with Tim Russert about his new book, as well as his take on President Bush, the prospects for Democrats in this year's Congressional elections and lots more.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Tim Russert, welcome to "Late Edition." Good to have you back on the program.

RUSSERT: My Sunday morning partner.

BLITZER: Good. Thank you. You've got two excellent books now. "Big Russ and Me," you made it number one. This new book, "Wisdom of Our Father's: Lessons and Letter from Daughters and Sons," we're going to get to this new book momentarily.

I've got to pick your brain. It's Sunday morning. Let's talk politics a little bit. Our latest CNN poll has Bush job approval at 36 percent approve, 57 percent disapprove.

If you take a look at some all-time low presidential job approval ratings, Nixon was at 24 percent in mid July '74, Jimmy Carter was at 28 percent, Bush 41 was at 29 percent. Clinton's lowest was at 37 percent in early June 1993. Bush 43 was a 34 percent earlier. Some polls, not ours, have him even down at 31 percent.

Can this guy come back anytime between now and the mid-term elections so that the Republicans presumably might be helped?

RUSSERT: It's going to be very hard. He needs the right confluence of the sun, the moon, the stars all aligning and adjusting. The White House is very relieved there's now a new prime minister, a new government in Iraq. And they're hoping that they can secure that country, which would allow, prior to the mid-term elections, the withdrawal of a significant amount of American troops. That would be good news.

Secondly, there's going to be another hurricane, Wolf. And can this administration and the local government of Louisiana perform better than they did during Katrina, and show the American people they've earned something? Third, what's going to happen to gas prices? If they go down a little bit.

And the president gets lucky on those three issues, if you will, can he get up above 40 percent? Possibly, but no one can predict it.

BLITZER: Here's a -- you're talking about Iraq, which is hovering over this administration like no other issue. His approval as far as the handling of the situation in Iraq is at 34 percent, 62 percent disapprove.

But you talk about a new government emerging now in Iraq. Here's what the president said the other day. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: Our nation's been through three difficult years in Iraq. And the way forward will bring more days of challenge and loss.

The progress we have made has been hard-fought, and it's been incremental. There have been set backs and missteps like Abu Ghraib. They were felt immediately and have been difficult to overcome. Yet, we've now reached a turning point in the struggle between freedom and terror.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: He's trying to balance a realistic assessment. At the same time, he uses the phrase "a turning point," which may or may not happen.

RUSSERT: We do not know if this will be a turning point. The reason is, are there enough young Iraqis who will step forward and say, "I believe in this new democracy. And to prove that, I'm willing to shed my blood and give my life."

It is then and only then can Americans start coming home. That's the unanswered question. Do the Iraqis believe, across the board, in their government and willing to take on the insurgency without any question?

BLITZER: Here's the poll on Democrats and Republicans, the generic poll as far as Congress and the mid-term elections are concerned. Among registered voters in our CNN poll, 52 percent say they prefer Democrats, 38 percent say they prefer Republicans.

But that's the generic. When it comes to specific races, obviously people sort of like their own personal congressman or congresswoman, even though they might not like the Congress as a whole.

RUSSET: But that number indicates right now we'll have a preference for the Democrats. There's no doubt about it. In 1994, we saw similar numbers. And for the first time in 40 years, the Republicans captured the House and the Senate.

The highest number predicted in '94 was that the Republicans would capture anywhere from 35 to 40 seats. They wound up winning some 55, 56, 57 seats.

Who knows what's going to happen? But right now, the Democrats are very well-positioned. Why? In the words of Newt Gingrich, the Republican who led the '94 revolution, the Democrats's best bumper sticker is "Had enough."

BLITZER: Well, let me play you a clip from what Newt Gingrich said on "Meet the Press" on May 14. Because he's a smart guy, obviously. And he was the architect of turning that Congressional situation from Democrat to Republican back in '94. Listen to what he said to you.

RUSSET: Great.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

NEWT GINGRICH, FORMER REPUBLICAN HOUSE MEMBER: Congresswoman Pelosi could not explain what her speakership would be because it'd be so far to the left they would guarantee the Republicans re-election. So I was saying partly, they can't possibly put together a Contract with America because Howard Dean and Nancy Pelosi and their allies are so far to the left they can't be clear what they would do: raise taxes, create more big bureaucracy, have a much weaker system of defending America, just go down the list.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: That's Newt Gingrich.

RUSSET: Yeah. I think you'll see a lot of Republicans saying, "OK, you know what we've done. But what will they do if we hand over power? Where do the Democrats stand on taxes and on gasoline prices and Iraq? They're opposed to us, but what do they stand for?"

Some Democrats want to put together a plan to show the American people a contract, if you will, with the American people, 2006 vintage.

Other Democrats are saying that's suicidal. We don't have to say anything. Sometimes nothing's a real cool hand. We're not the Republicans. Vote them out. Send us in. Time for a change.

BLITZER: Karl Rove, the president's top political strategist, is a very smart guy. He wins elections. He won in 2004 for the president. Here's what he said at the American Enterprise Institute on May 16.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KARL ROVE, PRESIDENTIAL ADVISER: Ultimately, the American people are a center-right country, presented with a center-right party with center-right candidates, will vote center-right.

BLITZER: Is that still applicable, as they used to say?

RUSSET: Well, people will look at ideology and say, does the country tilt that way, center-right, a bit? Perhaps. But people are also very pragmatic and result oriented. And they see a problem with Iraq and the management with the war, a problem of Katrina and the management of that situation, a problem with gasoline prices. I happen to think that performance and concerns and anxiety really does trump ideology.

BLITZER: Here's what some strategists, Republican strategists think the Republicans need to do. They need to energize their base to get out the vote in November.

One hot social issue is gay marriage. Bill Frist, the Senate majority leader, told me on "Late Edition" just the other day...

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SENATOR BILL FRIST, MAJORITY LEADER: Right now, marriage is under attack in this country. And we've seen activist judges overturning state by state law. That is why we need an amendment to come to the floor of the United States Senate to define marriage as that union between one man and one woman.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Do you suspect that this constitutional amendment is going to get anywhere in the Senate or the House?

RUSSET: It won't pass in the Senate. There's certainly not enough to sustain any kind of signature by the president. It won't happen. The votes aren't there.

So what happens then? The Democrats know the Republicans are forcing them to go on the record in favor or against gay marriage. Because they want to go to the voters -- the GOP does -- and say, "Look, you don't know what they're going to do if they take over the government. They won't tell you. We're going to tell you who they really are."

The Democrats, however, have some weapons in their arsenal. They can continue to introduce resolutions about Iraq, resolutions about Katrina, resolutions about gas prices. They can talk about immigration.

This Democratic Party now is playing very openly for the Hispanic vote not only in this election, but in future presidential elections. That's why you see such a battle for the soul of the Republican Party as they try to wrestle what to do with 11 million illegal immigrants.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And still ahead, Tim Russert talks about what inspired him to write his new book, "Wisdom of Our Fathers." And we're standing by to speak live with the mayor of Los Angeles, Antonio Villaraigosa. And my special interview coming up with Jimmy Carter. "Late Edition" will be right back. But first, this.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Ken Lay, what's his story? The Enron founder was convicted by a Texas federal jury this week on conspiracy and fraud charges stemming from his energy company's 2001 collapse. Lay, who's expected to appeal the verdict, served as chairman of what was the seventh-largest company in the United States when Enron declared bankruptcy in 2001. Federal prosecutors accused him of orchestrating a conspiracy to artificially inflate profits and hide millions in company losses. Lay is scheduled to be sentenced on September 11. He faces up to 45 years in prison.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." We return now to my conversation with NBC's "Meet the Press" moderator and managing editor, Tim Russert.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: It's never too early to talk about presidential politics 2008. Our CNN poll had Hillary Clinton -- that was back in February -- with 39 percent, everybody else a lot less, John Kerry, Al Gore, John Edwards.

As you can see on the Republican side, back in February, Rudy Giuliani was at 33 percent, John McCain at 28 percent, everybody in single digits. What do you see shaping up right now?

RUSSERT: A wide-open race in both parties. The first time in a half century where you won't have an incumbent president or vice president seeking the nomination.

Hillary Clinton, the front-runner of the Democratic side. She'll raise $60 million in her re-election bid in New York State, spend $20 million, and have kitty of $40 million for the presidential race.

But John Kerry, John Edwards, Joe Biden, Chris Dodd, Mark Warner, Tom Vilsack, Bill Richardson, Evan Bayh, they're not going away. Russ Feingold. One of them believes that there's going to be an alternative to the front-runner, an alternative to Hillary. And they want to position themselves for that role.

On the Republican side, I see John McCain, Mitt Romney of Massachusetts, George Allen of Virginia kind of in the top tier, waiting to see Rudy Giuliani, the former mayor of New York, is going to get in. And then Governor Huckabee, Senator Brownback, others contending.

I think eight to 10 candidates in each party running for president of the United States.

BLITZER: That's great for us.

RUSSET: Every Sunday morning.

BLITZER: Fabulous. A couple of other things before we get to the book. Alberto Gonzales, the attorney general, he said something last Sunday that got a lot of journalists and others nervous.

"We have an obligation," he said, "to enforce the law and to prosecute those who engage in criminal activity. If the law provides that that conduct is in fact criminal and evidence is there to support it, we have an obligation, of course, to look at that very seriously." Asked whether the Justice Department was going to prosecute journalists, specifically New York Times journalists for reporting that story about warrantless wiretaps. It looks like this Justice Department, this Bush administration is taking steps that previous administrations, as far as journalists are concerned, wouldn't take.

RUSSET: And it has a real chilling effect on our ability to report the news. We rely on people who are going to talk to us, in confidence, about something that they believe, in terms of government policy, is not right.

Some people call them whistle-blowers. Other people call them confidential sources. But we rely on that information. It is necessary for the American people to become informed in the whole context.

I've been to countries, Wolf, you've been to countries where the papers and the news airwaves are filled only with official government information. You want to want to live there. I know my own situation with the Valerie Plame case where I was asked about a conversation of complaint. A White House official called me -- Scooter Libby -- to complain about a cable TV news program. And after that people would say, well, gee, you know, if we say anything to you, are you going to be called before a grand jury to testify? It has a chilling effect.

BLITZER: That Scooter Libby testimony, the prosecutor said this in the indictment of Scooter Libby, the vice president's former chief of staff. "Mr. Russert said to me did you know that Ambassador Wilson's wife works at the CIA. And I said no, I don't know that. And then he, Russert, said, yeah -- yes, all the reporters know it. And I said again, I don't know that."

That's what the prosecutor quoted Scooter Libby, as having told the grand jury. That's how your name got involved in this whole uproar.

RUSSERT: Yeah, much to my surprise. And what we now have learned from Patrick Fitzgerald is that Mr. Libby talked to the vice president, at least six other government officials, several reporters and two officials of the CIA about Valerie Plame before he even talked to me.

BLITZER: And the whole Valerie Plame, the wife of Joe Wilson -- that never came up in the conversation that you had with Scooter Libby, based on your testimony?

RUSSERT: It did not. It was a conversation of complaint about something that had been on the air.

I wish I had known about Valerie Plame. I wish I had known who she was. Because it would have been an interesting discussion to have within NBC. Hey, I have a great tip, a great story. Should we report this?

I found out about her when I read Bob Novak's column on that Monday in the Washington Post.

BLITZER: Let's talk about this new book, "Wisdom of our Fathers." You wrote this almost as an after thought to "Big Russ and Me," which became the number one bestseller on the New York Times list.

How did that come about? What made you decide you needed a follow-up with these letters that you got from sons and daughters?

RUSSERT: After I had written "Big Russ and Me," I went around the country. And people said, you know, Big Russ is a great guy. Would you make out the book to my dad though, Big Stan, Big Mike, Big Herb, Big Mario, Big Manuel? They perceived it as an invitation to talk about their dad.

And then I received 60,000 letters and e-mails from all across the country, daughters and sons, talking about not a special vacation or a material gift but "let me tell you, Tim, about what I learned from my dad."

And in fact, a friend of mine from Oklahoma put it this way, "The best advice is I want to see a sermon, not hear a sermon." They taught us through their actions, their hard work, their sacrifice, their devotion.

One father said to his daughter, "You worry too much." He built her a little box and said put all your worries -- write them down and put them in this box. Two weeks later he opened up and said, "This one's gone. Don't worry about it. This one's gone. Don't worry about it. You have to understand; don't let these worries get to you. Understand what's important in life and deal with it." Best advice ever. Wolf, we had a Web site, wisdomofourfathers.com. It still exists, wisdomofourfathers.com. People flooded it saying let me tell you about my dad.

One daughter said her mother died at an early age. Her father became Mr. Mom. He sewed the dresses and he went off to work. She sent him a Mother's Day card and a Father's Day card.

And my goal in reading these letters was that, one, they deserved to be read. Two, they deserved to be remembered.

And can I construct a book like "Wisdom of our Fathers," which is a road map for every parent, young or old; this is how to get it right. What will your kids say about you 10, 20, 30 years from now?

They remember the small moments that make the big difference in their lives. That's what the book's all about.

BLITZER: "Wisdom of our Fathers: Lessons and letters from Daughters and Sons," the follow up to "Big Russ and Me."

Tim Russert, thanks for coming in.

RUSSERT: Thanks, Wolf.

BLITZER: Congratulations and good luck.

RUSSERT: Go Buffalo.

BLITZER: And still to come, Los Angeles mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa and former president, Jimmy Carter.

And don't forget our Web question of the week: "Do you agree with the Senate measure making English the national language of the United States?" Log on to CNN.com/lateedition to cast your vote. The results at the end of the program. We'll be right back.

BLITZER: This is "Late Edition," the last word in Sunday talk.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JIMMY CARTER, FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: I think it's a very serious mistake when the United States refuses to have talks with problem regimes.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: From the nuclear standoff with Iran to alleged abuses at Guantanamo Bay and anxiety about the high cost of gas. What moves should the U.S. make? Former President Jimmy Carter speaks out in a special interview.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. SENATOR BILL FRIST, R-TENNESSEE: This is a success for the American people. It is a success for people who hope to participate someday in that American dream.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. RICK SANTORUM, (R-PA) This legislation, I think, is well outside what I would consider responsible reform.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: The U.S. Senate takes a step toward immigration reform, as the issue shifts to the House of Representatives. Perspective on the immigration battle and the growing political power of Hispanic Americans, from Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa.

Plus, the latest on the devastating earthquake in Indonesia. Nearly 4,000 people are confirmed dead.

Welcome back. We'll go live to Indonesia in a moment. My interview with Jimmy Carter, that's coming up, as well. First, though, let's get a quick check of what's in the news right now. CNN's Fredricka Whitfield's standing by from the CNN Center. Fred?

BLITZER: It's been a devastating 36 hours for tens of thousands of people in Indonesia left homeless by a powerful earthquake. The death toll right now around 4,000. Thousands more are injured. CNN's Dan Rivers is in one of the hardest-hit areas. Where exactly are you, Dan?

RIVERS: We're in the city of Yogyakarta at the moment, which is right in the center of this region that's been devastated by the earthquake. We spent the day traveling further south towards the very heart of the devastation. And really harrowing scenes that we saw.

We went to one village, where almost every single building had been flattened by the force of the earthquake. There were wounded people at the side of the road awaiting treatment. One elderly gentleman with a really bad break on his leg and cuts and lacerations all over his face. And in that one village alone, of the 4,000 people that lived there, 2,000, that's half the population, had been treated for serious injuries and taken to hospital. So that gives you an idea of just the sheer number of injuries, let alone the number of people that have died.

BLITZER: I know we have a long delay. But a quick follow-up question. Is there a sense that emergency relief operations are arriving, as needed? Or is there a huge, huge delay and that lives could be lost in this interim?

RIVERS: I think emergency aid is beginning to filter in. But the sheer scale of this has obviously overwhelmed the Indonesian authorities. We were in one village today, and the Indonesian army came past. But there wasn't much sign of them actually doing much to help these people. The airport has been knocked out of action here. The runway is actually cracked, which has really hampered getting a large amount of aid into this area. We understand that may be repaired tomorrow, which will dramatically help get more aid to the people that really need it.

BLITZER: Dan Rivers on the scene for us in Yogyakarta, Indonesia. Dan, we'll get back with you. Thanks for your important work for our viewers. Much more on this story coming up here on CNN. Stay with CNN for all the latest on the fallout from the disaster from that earthquake in Indonesia.

Since leaving office in 1981, former U.S. President Jimmy Carter has been very active and very outspoken on international and domestic issues. This past week, I had a chance to speak with him about human rights around the world. The Israeli/Palestinian conflict. The nuclear standoff with Iran and lots more.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And joining us now is the former president of the United States, Jimmy Carter. Mr. President, thanks so much for joining us. Welcome back. CARTER: It's good to be with you again, Wolf, and the folks in the situation room.

BLITZER: Thank you. I know you have a major conference that you're involved with, it's human rights. I read your remarks on human rights. I want to get to all of those issues, including the human rights aspects of this enormous immigration debate that we've seen unfold in this country over the past several weeks.

You recently wrote in the Miami Herald this. You said, "Competing legislation from the House of Representative on immigration has strong racist overtones." What specifically are you referring to?

CARTER: Well, it's such a punitive approach to the very sensitive issue of immigration. And I try to point out in my editorial that these people who come to our country, and even the ones who employ them are good, honest, hard-working, dedicated people, and they don't need to be punished.

And so, I think whenever you single out a particular category of people for just punitive legislation, as I believe was done in the House version of the bill that might be passed, it does have overtones distinguishing between a particular class of people.

BLITZER: So you're referring specifically to the House legislation, which would categorize these illegal immigrants as felons?

CARTER: That's correct. And also calls for the deportation of all of them and the categorization as you just said, of every one as a convicted criminal. This is not the proper approach to a nation that prides itself on being the champion of democracy, freedom and human rights.

BLITZER: The president, the current president's plan calls for strong border security, a guest-worker program and a path towards citizenship. It's sort of -- pretty much coincides with what senators Kennedy and McCain have in mind with the Senate. Certainly supports, but there's strong opposition in the House. On this issue, I take it you don't have a lot of disagreement with President Bush.

CARTER: No, that's exactly right. I think that the approach that has been put forward and they're currently being considered, the bill in the Senate as supporting, the way I understand it, by President Bush is very compatible with my own views.

BLITZER: What about English as the official language of the United States? Should there be legislation that makes English the official or national language of the U.S.?

CARTER: No, I don't think so. You know, we've gotten along for more than 200 years without excluding other languages. This is a country that's kind of a melting pot for languages around the world, and I don't think there's any need for it.

It's just kind of one of those emotional issues that can turn one part of America against another. You know, we've survived OK without such language, and I think just to specifically say that it's the only language that we will accept officially is a wrong approach.

BLITZER: The speech you delivered on human rights this week was a powerful speech. It included an indictment of current U.S. policy on many sensitive issues in terms of human rights. Let me read an excerpt from what you said at the Carter Center.

You said, "In the last few years we've seen an embarrassment come to my own country in the realm of human rights." And you went on to say, "The equation that used to be taken for granted between a great democracy and a great champion of human rights has certainly been brought into question."

Specifically, what are you referring to? What is embarrassing to you as far as America's current human rights policy is concerned?

CARTER: Wolf, what we have here is a group of human rights heroes that come to us from troubled nations; that is, nations within which human rights abuses are a common thing. And in the past, I've always been inspired almost without question by the fact that United States was the champion of the protection of human rights, the declaration of human rights, the Geneva Conventions.

And recently, of course, as is well known, it's been covered on CNN as well as it has in all news media in the world, we have been guilty of having people in this country and in our own prisons, in Guantanamo and even in the Gulf region, without accusation being made against them, incarcerated for now years without a trial, without access of lawyers, sometimes even deprived of access to their own families.

Now, it's been highly publicized that there have been many instances of torture. And I don't think there's any doubt that the United States has, indeed, on occasion, when attention has been focused on those prisons that are ours, some of them still secret, that we have actually taken prisoners and transported them to other countries where they have very well been tortured.

So these kinds of signals that go from the United States, defended by some of the top people in our government, have sent a wave of consternation and disappointment and disillusionment to people who are applauding for human rights in their own countries.

And they see their own oppressive governments using these examples from the United States to condone similar activities against helpless people.

BLITZER: The secretary of state, Condoleezza Rice said this last Sunday. She said, "Obviously, we don't want to be the world's jailer. We will be delighted when we can close down Guantanamo, but I would ask this: If we do close down Guantanamo, what becomes of the hundreds of dangerous people who were picked up on the battlefields on Afghanistan, who were picked up because of their association with Al Qaida?"

What would you say to Condoleezza Rice, the secretary of state?

CARTER: Well, last year, the major recommendation that a similar conference made was that Guantanamo be closed immediately. And, of course, that's been a similar position taken by the United Nations and by other international organizations that are concerned about human rights.

If they close Guantanamo, there are several things that can be done. One is, those prisoners that we accuse of crimes, let them be put on trial openly and -- so that the world can observe the process.

Those that we believe are guilty, let them be sent by their own country -- back to their own countries of origin, some even in Europe, Western Europe, some in the Gulf region, and let them be put on trial there.

Others that are not susceptible to trial and conviction, let them be released. This has been done in the past following previous wars in which the United States has been involved. I think the same thing can be done now.

As a matter of fact, there are top people in the administration now, as you well know, who are seriously considering the closing of Guantanamo. And my prediction is that within the next year or two, Guantanamo will indeed be closed.

BLITZER: Should the U.S., should President Bush authorize direct talks between the United States and Iran on Iran's nuclear program?

As you know, right now, that dialogue consists of others. The Europeans are talking directly to the Iranians, but there's been no direct dialogue. The Iranians apparently want this kind of dialogue. What do you think?

CARTER: I think it's a very serious mistake when the United States refuses to have direct talks with problem regimes. This applies in North Korea and it also applies, now, in Iran.

When we back away from any sort of direct discussion with the leaders of those countries, and threaten either nuclear action against them -- it's been rumored even to consider the use of nuclear weapons -- and either that or very severe punishment through economic sanctions and say, we refuse to talk to you at all about this problem, I think it's a mistake.

And I don't know what would be the result of the discussions, but since Iran, under great pressure now, has offered, for the first time in more than 25 years to have direct talks with the United States, I think it seems to indicate that the Iranian leaders see that they've made a mistake and that they need to make a firm commitment to the United States and to the rest of the world, we want to improve the high quality of nuclear materials, but that they will be used only for peaceful uses.

That is the generation of electricity. And if we work out a good deal between the United States and Iran and Iran and the rest of the world, then we will put them under the observation of the international -- with the energy commission. So I think direct talks would be very helpful.

BLITZER: Here's what the Israeli prime minister, Ehud Olmert, says about the Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

He says, "Ahmadinejad talks today like Hitler spoke before seizing power. We are dealing with a psychopath of the worst kind, with an anti-Semite. God forbid this man from ever getting his hand on nuclear weapons." That's what he told the German newspaper, Bild, on May 1.

He said similar things to me last Sunday when I interviewed him. If, in fact, this is a new Hitler, what's the point?

I guess that what's the Israelis would say. What's the point of talking to someone if he's simply a new Hitler?

CARTER: Well, I don't disagree with what Prime Minister Olmert has said about the danger of Iran becoming a nuclear power. That's obvious, I think, to everyone in the outside world, that Iran should not become a country with a nuclear arsenal, which I think would be very dangerous to world peace.

But I don't think that has anything to do with the advisability of using diplomatic means which President Bush has endorsed, including direct talks with Iran, maybe with that as a limited agenda item. I don't see any relationship between the two.

BLITZER: Here's what the president said this week, President Bush, in a direct warning to the Iranians. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: The United States and the international community have made our common position clear. We're determined that the Iranian regime must not gain nuclear weapons. I told the prime minister what I stated publicly before. Israel is a close friend and ally of the United States, and, in the event of any attack on Israel, the United States will come to Israel's aid.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Anything in that section that you would disagree with?

CARTER: No. I don't think there's any doubt that, if any of the neighboring countries, including Iran, should make an attack on Israel of a military nature, that we would respond and help to defend Israel. That's been the policy of our country since long before I became president, in those ancient days.

And I believe that what President Bush has said is applicable, relevant, to this present administration, but all the previous administrations, I would say, going back at least 50 years.

BLITZER: And coming up, could U.S. drivers see a rerun of what occurred during the carter administration, long gas lines? The former president talks about a potential energy crisis.

Then, the immigration battle and its impact on the political power of Hispanic Americans. The Los Angeles mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa joins us live with his perspective on that and more.

Plus, in case you missed it, "Late Edition's" highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States. "Late Edition" continues right after this.

BLITZER: Welcome back to "Late Edition." I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting from Los Angeles. We return now to my interview with former President Jimmy Carter.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Let's talk a little bit about human rights in the West Bank, in Gaza, the Palestinian/Israeli problem, which is clearly very much on your agenda right now. You say the elections were very free, very fair, the elections that saw Hamas win and become the leader of this new Palestinian government. Listen to what Olmert, Ehud Olmert, the prime minister, said this week at the White House about this new Hamas-led Palestinian government.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

EHUD OLMERT, ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER: Unfortunately, the rise of Hamas, a terrorist organization which refuses to recognize Israel's right to exist and regards terrorism as a legitimate tool, severely undermines the possibility of promoting a genuine peace process.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Is the peace process effectively dead right now?

CARTER: Well, it depends on a judgment to be made by Israel and the Palestinians, and with a heavy influence from Washington. There is now a very clearly identified interlocutor, or a negotiator, who represents the Palestinian community from two points of view. One is the president of the Palestine National Assembly, and that is Mahmoud Abbas.

And the other point of view is the leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, the PLO. And that is the same person, Mahmoud Abbas. And so he has been going around national capitals in Europe and other places during the last few months, strongly calling for direct talks between himself and representatives of the Israeli government.

And there have been statements made even by Hamas leaders that they favor these direct talks between Abbas and representatives from Israel. So the problem ... BLITZER: ... Mr. President, excuse me for interrupting you, but Olmert says that he's powerless, he's helpless, he respects him, he thinks he's a good man. But he really has no longer authority to deliver anything.

CARTER: Well, I don't want to get into a debate with the prime minister of Israel, whom I respect very much. But the fact is that there are only two positions that are distinct positions of authority. One is the head of the Palestinian government and the other one is the head of the Palestinian liberation organization. And the PLO is the only organization, as you know, that the government of Israel recognizes.

So Abbas can't speak for the Palestinian community officially. He's also been the one in the past, as you know, that was endorsed by the United States government under President Bush and by the Israel government under the former prime minister of Israel, Sharon.

So if there is a desire to have peace talks, obviously the Palestinians have a representative who can speak for the Palestinian people.

BLITZER: Israel is saying -- the government of Israel, that if there are no negotiations, Israel will take unilateral action to disengage, as it calls it, from the West Bank, at least from parts of the West Bank. I know you've written an article suggesting that would be an illegal land grab, words to that effect, what you said. I asked Olmert about your article on "Late Edition" last Sunday. Here's what he said about your comment. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

OLMERT: I have enormous respect for President Carter, who comes to visit me every now and then. When he's in Israel, I think some of his statements are different than the ones that he writes when he's far away. But I think that the basic point is this: Shall we negotiate with the terrorist government? I don't know that there is one serious American representative that will advise Israel to sit with a terrorist government and negotiate with them.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Do you want to comment on that?

CARTER: I think I just have, Wolf. I'm not advocating that Prime Minister Olmert negotiate with the Hamas organization. I'm advocating that they negotiate with Mahmoud Abbas, who is the president of the Palestinian Organization, the government, and also the head of the PLO.

I haven't advocated that assistance of an economic character be given to the Hamas government. What I've advocated is that humanitarian assistance only be given directly to the people in the West Bank and Gaza through the United Nations agencies, perhaps, through the United Nations High Commission on Refugees, through UNICEF and other organizations, bypassing the Hamas government. So there's a difference between Hamas on the one hand, with whom Israel will not negotiate and which the United States cannot recognize, and the Palestinian people on the other and their own chosen president and the leader of the PLO, Mahmoud Abbas.

BLITZER: We're almost completely out of time, Mr. President, but I was going through some research the other day, and I went back to your State of the Union address in 1980 and found this passage. And I want to play a clip for you from what you said, what, some 26 years ago. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

CARTER: Our excessive dependence on foreign oil is a clear and present danger to our nation's security. (Applause). The need has never been more urgent. At long last, we must have a clear, comprehensive energy policy for the United States.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: But 26 years later you could say -- the current president could say exactly the same thing. What has gone wrong? Why has this country failed over these past 26 years to come up with a clear, comprehensive energy policy that will reduce what you call our excessive dependence on foreign oil?

CARTER: Wolf, during my four years in office, this was always a top priority, and we were able to reduce dramatically the U.S. dependence on foreign oil by increasing production in this country and other means, and primarily by conservation. We started out with 12 million barrels a day being imported. We reduced it down to four million barrels over a long period of time.

Now it's back up to 12 million barrels a day. And this is increasingly making our own country dependent upon and almost forced to collaborate with regimes that would not otherwise be acceptable. And I think it puts the security of our own country in danger, as I said, as you say, 25 years ago.

So, a heavy emphasis on conservation, which I pursued when I was president, would be the first major step, and that's a main step so far that has not yet been taken in recent years.

BLITZER: We have to leave it right there, Mr. President. I want to leave it on a happy note. This week you and your former vice president, Walter Mondale, became the longest living ex-president and ex-vice president in American history, beating Adams and Jefferson. Congratulations to you on that. We hope both of you are around for many, many more years to come. Thanks for all your good work.

CARTER: Thank you, Wolf. All you have to do is live a long life and choose a healthy vice president.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: And coming up, do calls for the United States to make English its national language or official language have racial overtones? We'll talk about that and more with the mayor of Los Angeles, Antonio Villaraigosa. He's standing by live.

Up next, though, we'll get a quick check of what's in the news right now, including the latest on that devastating earthquake in Indonesia. Stay with "Late Edition."

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE W. BUSH, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: You can't secure our border with thousands trying to sneak in. And therefore, this country needs a temporary worker program that will allow foreign workers to enter our country legally.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: President Bush, renewing his call for an overhaul of U.S. immigration laws. Welcome back to "Late Edition." We're reporting from Los Angeles.

And joining us, now, is the city's mayor, Antonio Villaraigosa. He made history last year by becoming the first elected Hispanic mayor of L.A.

Mr. Mayor, good to be in your beautiful city.

MAYOR ANTONIO VILLARAIGOSA (D), LOS ANGELES: Good to be here with you. Welcome to Los Angeles.

BLITZER: Thank you very much. Lots to talk about. Let's get to the Senate. The U.S. Senate, back in Washington, approved immigration reform. It brought together this odd coalition, the president and other Republicans like Bill Frist, the majority leader, John McCain, a lot of Democrats, including Senator Kennedy.

Are you on-board, basically, with what the Senate has approved?

VILLARAIGOSA: I'm on board, basically, with what they've approved. Not all of it is...

BLITZER: What don't you like?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, I think the amendment that deals with English as a national language was unnecessary. We already know it's the language of commerce and success.

You and I are speaking English now. They didn't allocate money so people can learn English. I can tell you that, here in Los Angeles, there are lines, thousands of people waiting to learn English in our adult schools.

BLITZER: Let me read to you what the amendment says, specifically, on English as a national language. It says, "The government of the United States shall preserve and enhance the role of English as the national language of the United States of America. Unless specifically stated in applicable law, no person has a right, entitlement, or claim to have the government of the United States or any of its officials or representatives act, communicate, perform or provide services, or provide materials in any language other than English."

Practically speaking, what does that mean for Los Angeles, in terms of providing services, information, in Spanish?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, what it means is you won't be able to communicate with people for badly needed services. They could be emergency services. They could be services for medical care.

And again, it was one of those things that you see Congress do quite often. It's probably why this Congress and its majority is doing so poorly with the American public right now.

With all of the things they have to do right now, they're going to pass amendments like this.

Having said that, I do support the overall -- this broad immigration reform, comprehensive immigration reform. As you said, it was a coalition put together. And I do support it.

BLITZER: The Senate version does have immigration reform, a guest worker provision, a path towards citizenship for 11 million or 12 million, at least a lot of illegal immigrants, right now.

And it has a border security aspect. The House, which already passed immigration reform, basically deals almost exclusively with the issue of border security and enforcement, doesn't deal with other issues.

The chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner, said this on Friday. Listen to what he said.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

REP. JAMES SENSENBRENNER, HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE CHAIR: I can't predict how anything is going to play out in the conference.

Let me say that amnesty is wrong because amnesty rewards someone for illegal behavior. And the system that has been set up in the Senate will also result in gross document fraud.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: What he's referring to is that, if an illegal immigrant has been here for five years or longer, they would be eligible toward this path toward citizenship.

And what critics are suggesting is there's going to be widespread fraud. Even those who have been here a few months or only a few years, they'll be able to prove they've been here for five years or longer.

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, actually, Mr. Sensenbrenner agrees with many of the proponents of the Senate version of this immigration reform. And that is that amnesty is not what we're talking about here. Nobody is talking about amnesty.

There will be a fine, a $1,000 fine on the front-end and a $1,000 fine on the back-end. You don't automatically become a citizen in this country. You've got to earn citizenship and this proposal allows for that.

It does not provide for amnesty in the way that he has said. And so maybe there is an opportunity for us to come together, because nobody is proposing amnesty at this time.

BLITZER: What they are saying, the critics, as you know, that's basically, a slap on the wrist. Those aren't serious issues, $1,000 here, $1,000 there. People will be able to come up with that money and become citizens.

VILLARAIGOSA: When you're making minimum wage and less, coming up with $2,000 is a lot of money. I can tell you that. And what they like to do, look, this is a way for them to create a wedge issue, to polarize the nation. Leaders are supposed to bring people together. This immigration proposal, as proposed by the Senate, is a middle ground, make no mistake about it. The Sensenbrenner proposals which would make 12 million people felons is not a middle ground. It's an extreme position.

BLITZER: Your friend, the governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, originally said he didn't like the idea of dispatching National Guard troops to the border with Mexico. He's reluctantly come around to a -- listen to what he said on Wednesday, when he was meeting with the Mexican president, Vicente Fox.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER, GOVERNOR OF CALIFORNIA: I oppose the using of military for law-enforcement duties. However, I am prepared to commit the California National Guard troops in support of border- patrol operations. But as I said, it has to be on a temporary basis.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: You agree with him on that?

VILLARAIGOSA: Absolutely. And I'll say this. I think our National Guard is already stretched too thin. I don't think it's an appropriate use of the National Guard. As I said on your show a couple of weeks ago, the Bush administration was authorized 10,000 positions for border-patrol agents. They've only filled 250. They need to get on the job of providing the border security the people want.

A lot of people recognized there are homeland security aspects hovering over this immigration debate, if terrorists, for example, could simply walk into the United States along the Mexican border. Representative Duncan Hunter, the chairman of the House armed services committee, said this. Listen to what he said.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

U.S. REPRESENTATIVE DUNCAN HUNTER, (R-CA): People now understand, if you want to get into the United States illegally, you no longer come through L.A. International Airport. You come across the land border between Mexico and the United States. So there's a dimension of homeland security that's concerned about terrorism that needs to be focused on this. And this no longer is simply an immigration issue. It's a security issue.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: How worried are you, Mr. Mayor, that terrorists will come into the United States from Mexico along the border with California?

VILLARAIGOSA: I'm more worried about terrorists exposing our ports and our airports. And this is a Congress that spent a lot of time about Dubai and all of that, and has failed to give us the resources we need here in Los Angeles and across the country to protect our ports and our airports. They do a lot of talking. They like demagoguing on these issues. And then they don't provide you with the money that you need, as first responders.

I'm the mayor of Los Angeles, and I have a responsibility. I just don't talk about this issue of homeland security. I have the responsibilities the leader of the city to provide the resources, to protect the citizenry. And the federal government has failed. And the Congress has failed. What they do is spend a lot of time on that kind of rhetoric and then not give us the resources we need to protect our cities.

BLITZER: One of the key issues you're dealing with here is education in Los Angeles. And I think it's fair to say, you will acknowledge this city's education system has failed. You recently issued a document, you pointed out that 81 percent of the middle-school students here in L.A. attend failing schools. Eighth graders in L.A. lag two years behind their peers in New York City.

A Harvard University study found that nearly half of the African American and Latino students failed to graduate in four years. You want to revolutionize the education system here and take control from the Board of Education, which is running into a lot of opposition. But you feel strongly on this.

VILLARAIGOSA: Actually, I think this issue of education in our urban schools across the nation, not just here in Los Angeles, is a national security issue. When you look at the fact that too many of our kids can't read and write when they graduate, they can't pass a high-school exit exam that tests you at the eighth-grade level, half of our kids are dropping out, there's no accountability in our schools, we're $27 million under-funded in the Leave No Child Behind Act, 44th in per-pupil spending here in Los Angeles, once again, it's another case of the lack of accountability and responsibility. A lot of talk about what we can and should do. And not enough doing. And so what I've said is, like New York, Chicago, Boston, and Cleveland, the mayor needs to ultimately oversee our public schools so that we can reduce...

BLITZER: Who is fighting you on this?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, primarily, a group of stakeholders. Right now, it's the teacher's union, even though I've been very, very supportive of the fact we need to empower teachers, empower parents. I want to see parent compacts, student accountability, in terms of uniforms, in terms of more discipline in our schools. We want to give teacher training, focus on principals getting more collaborative in their decisionmaking. Decisions made at the local school site...

BLITZER: Governor Schwarzenegger supports you on this?

VILLARAIGOSA: He is supportive, and so is the leader of the California state assembly, Fabian Nunez, the speaker. And the pro tem.

BLITZER: A lot of people are pointing to this alliance, if you will, this odd couple, Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and Arnold Schwarzenegger, the governor. What's the story here? Are the two of you political allies right now? Because he's facing a tough re-election. A lot of Democrats would like to become -- would like to see a Democrat take charge.

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, look, I am a Democrat. But I also have a responsibility as the mayor of this city to work with the governor, whoever that is. Just as I have to work with the president of the United States, who's been duly elected. I don't have to have voted for that person. I do have to work with him. Both of us agree the situation around the schools is something that we need to get a handle of -- on, rather. It's unacceptable that the schools aren't working in the way that they should.

We think we can work together on that. We also worked very closely together on the infrastructure bond to provide more money for goods and transportation, for goods movement, for the infrastructure needs of Los Angeles and the state, so...

BLITZER: Are you going to vote for Arnold Schwarzenegger?

VILLARAIGOSA: Well, we're going to work with him all the way to the election?

BLITZER: Well, you're leaving open the door. You might vote for him.

VILLARAIGOSA: No. I'm a Democrat, and the governor knows that I support whoever the Democratic nominee is going to be. But right now, I'm going to focus on the work that he and I can do together. He's a good man. We've been able to develop a good friendship. That benefits the city of Los Angeles and the state of California. BLITZER: Well, you've got a tough agenda out here, tough problems. Mr. Mayor, thanks for the hospitality. Thanks for coming in this Memorial Day weekend.

VILLARAIGOSA: Spend your money here in Los Angeles.

BLITZER: We're spending some money here. Thank you. And coming up, in case you missed it, our highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States. Stay with us.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

BLITZER: Danica Patrick. What's her story?

(voice over): The 24-year-old race car driver will be behind the wheel today, trying to become the first female to win the Indianapolis 500.

In 2005, Patrick was voted the Indy Racing League's "rookie of the year," winning $1 million. She also finished fourth in last year's Indy 500, the best performance by a woman in the 90-year-old race's history.

Although she has yet to win a race in 19 starts, Patrick is a fan favorite and says she more than welcomes the challenge of succeeding in a male-dominated sport.

BLITZER: And now, in case you missed it, let's check some of the highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States.

On "Fox News Sunday," Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist discussed the immigration bill just approved by the Senate.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. BILL FRIST, REPUBLICAN MAJORITY LEADER: It's not necessarily politically popular. It's certainly not easy, as we've seen on the floor.

But I can tell you the bill that came off the Senate floor, not perfect -- I don't agree with everything in that bill -- does reflect the overall will of the Senate.

It's a first step. We're going to go to confidence. The president, obviously, is going to get very involved. And with that, we'll be able to address what is a national security, economic and humanitarian issue.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: On NBC's "Meet the Press," the Republican chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, James Sensenbrenner, explained why he opposes the Senate bill.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SENSENBRENNER: I want to solve the problem. The American people want this problem solved. But this time, we've got to do it right.

And to do it right means to do things in the proper order. The secret is, first secure the border and enforce the employer sanctions law. If we don't do both of those things, then we will simply get more illegal immigrants coming across the border and taking jobs.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: On CBS's "Face the Nation," the Senate majority whip, Mitch McConnell and Democratic senator, Chuck Schumer, sparred over which party has the upper hand, heading into the November congressional elections.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

SEN. MITCH MCCONNELL (R) KY: Americans have forgotten what they do when they're in the majority. I can tell you what they'll do. They'll wave the white flag in the war on terror. They'll raise taxes. And they'll try to censure the president in the Senate and impeach the president in the House. This is what their agenda really is.

SEN. CHARLES SCHUMER (D) NY: The Republican party, whether it's the president or the Senate leadership, doesn't have anything to say other than these, sort of, fear tactics aimed at Democrats. Now, it's not going to work.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Those are some of the other highlights from the other Sunday morning talk shows here in the United States.

Our "Late Edition" Web question asks this: "Do you agree with the Senate measure making English the national language of the United States?" Here's the results of how you voted?

Look at this: 82 percent of you said yes; 18 percent said no. Remember, though, this is not, I repeat, not, a scientific poll.

Let's take a look at what's on the cover of this week's major news magazines here in the United States.

U.S. News and World Report, has "Global warming: Can We Live With It?"

Time Magazine features "Congo: The Hidden Toll of the World's Deadliest War."

And Newsweek Magazine is "Rethinking 'The Marriage Crunch.'"

Those are the covers of the major newsmagazines here in the United States.

Let's get a few of your e-mails. Edward from Franklin, Connecticut writes this: "Immigration reform should include community or military service for all illegal aliens if they want U.S. citizenship; they could help with rebuilding the hurricane-affected areas and building border fences. Most Americans believe that the American dream should not be free for those who are here illegally; make them earn it."

Darrell from Lake Worth, Florida writes: "This immigration bill that passed is amnesty, no matter what the inept politicians say. The real problem is that these big employers are exploiting Mexicans with cheaper wages, thus driving down American's wages. The solution is to make these employers pay the legal minimum wages."

We always welcome your comments here on "Late Edition." And that's your "Late Edition" for this Sunday. I'm Wolf Blitzer, reporting from Los Angeles. See you during the week.

Senate Floor - Yesterday Evening - Discussion of General Hayden's Nomination

8:00 PM - 10:05 PM

ORRIN HATCH: Finally, mr. President, i'd like to thank the leadership for expeditiously scheduling the confirmation vote for general michael v. Heyden of the united states air force to be director of the central intelligence agency. Particular, i'd like to thank -- agency. In particular, i'd like to thank intelligence committee chairman roberts for organizing the open and closed hearings last week before our committee. The committee has a heavy work schedule but nothing should be more important than moving forward an important nomination like this one. I would also like to recognize the work of my other colleague, senator warner, for expediting this nomination through his committee. Air force general michaelhayden has spent his life -- heyden has spent his life in the service of our great country and i honor his dedication. He has honored us with his dedication. In my opinion, he has brought enormous distinction to the uniform he wears and his contributions have served the security of this nation and particularly since the attacks of 9/11 they have made a profound difference in our ability to defend ourselves in war unlike any we have ever been forced to fight. Generalhayden was before us last year and he is well-known to this body. When last we saw him, he was to become the first deputy of an organization formed by the congress, the office of the director of national intelligence. In the legislation that created this office, we tasked it and its first officeholders with the enormous job of weaving together the disparate but impressive elements of the american intelligence community. Our concept was to create a whole that would be greater than the sum of its parts but we left the -- parts. But we left the work in the hands of the imirs ambassador, neglect upon teerks and his deputy, the man whom the president has now nominated to head the central central intelligence agency. As a longtime military officer, as one who has spent most of his life as an intelligence consumer and a distinct part of his life in both the human and technical practices of intelligence, and now as architect of the new intelligence structure, generalhayden is an individual exceptionally prepared to take on the responsibility of transforming the c.I.A. It is my hope and expectation that under the leadership of generalhayden, the full capabilities of the -- talents and capabilities of the c.I.A. Do not only make the difference in winning this current war on global terrorism but remains central to facing all of the challenges that loom before us once this particular conflict is won. We have the very real possibility of conflicts with iran and north korea and we must face the fact that the day may come when we are faced with the threat of armed groups from latin america. What the c.I.A. Does today, if the less ons and experience it gathers from its contributions are conveyed to its new cadres will play a key, absolutely key role in managing the conflicts of tomorrow. Let's hope none of these potential conflicts becomes such, and i really don't believe we need to allow them to become such. Reform of the intelligence community in which the c.I.A. Has and should maintain a central position is already well underway in part due to creation of the office of the director of national intelligence and also due to the oversight of the senate intelligence committee in insisting that the flaws in the intelligence process we have revealed be readdressed. The d.N.I. Was created to coordinate the elements of the community as well as to advance a reform agenda for the community as a whole and in each of its elements. Reform particularly in time of war is never easy, and it is much more complicated than creating a new bureaucratic structure. It requires creating a new culture that brings a common professional set of doctrine and values to all components of the community that builds on the extraordinary capabilities that exist while assembling new hybrid excellencies within an entity whose effectiveness must become greater than the sum of its parts. Generalhayden conducted himself with great probity during his hearings last week and answered honest and detailed answers to a great range of questions ph- both the open hearing and the executive hearing. The general's lifetime experience has prepared him for taking his post and i have the highest regard for him. I might add that one of the first decisions that he will have made will be choosing mr. Campus to become his deputy. And i've been checking with many leaders in the c.I.A. And elsewhere and they say mr. Campus is an outstanding person who may help bring about an accord there that may be lacking. Having said all this, i want to praise director goss. I served with porter goss when he was chairman of the intelligence committee in the house. He's a wonderful man. He did a great job in helping to change some of the mindsets out there at the c.I.A. He made a very distinct imprint on the c.I.A. For good, and we will miss him as well. But it should not be construed that generalhayden is replacing him because he didn't do the job. Porter said he wasn't going to stay there an excessively long time. And i have to say that i believe that as great as porter goss is and was, that generalhayden will be a good replacement. He's one of the best people who has ever served this country. He spent a lifetime in intelligence. He is one of the few people who really understands it all, and he's a straight shooter. He tells the truth. He tells it the way it is. He's an exceptionally decent, honorable man. And his wife is a very honorable and good person as well, as are his children. So i hope that all of us will consider voting for generalhayden. He's worth it. We should vote for him. We should be unanimous in the selection of a c.I.A. Director. But even if we're not, i hope that the overwhelming number of senators who will vote for this great general, this great intelligence officer, this great person who we all know is honest, decent and capable. Mr. President, i yield the floor. A senator: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from oregon.

Mr. Wyden: mr. President, waiting for some time to talk about general hayden. I do note the presence of the distinguished chairman of our committee, the committee i'm proud to serve on, and i think given the fact that we are starting a discussion of generalhayden to head the central intelligence agency, what i'd like to do, mr. President, ask unanimous consent that chairman roberts would be allowed to speak at this time, and then per my unanimous consent request to be able to follow the chairman after he has completed his remarks. The presiding officer: without objection.

Mr. Roberts: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from kansas. Mr. Roberts: first, i want to thank the senator from oregon for allowing me to go first as chairman of the committee. Senator wyden is a very valued member of the committee, a very strong and independent views, but has always contributed in a bipartisan way in behalf of our national security. Well, good evening, sir. The hour is a little late. Actually the night is young, but i'm not. But nevertheless, i am going to try to be pertinent on a matter that is of real importance, and that is in fact the nomination and hopefully what we expect to be the confirmation of general michael v. Hayden to serve as director of the central intelligence agency. As chairman of the select committee on intelligence, i do rise tonight and associate myself with the remarks made by senator hatch, who is another very valued member of the committee, in strong support of the nomination of general hayden to be the next director of the central intelligence agency. He is eminently qualified for this position. He is a distinguished public servant, as has been noted, who has given more than 35 years of service to his country. Now, senator hatch referred to our hearings both open and closed that we held last week. It was my goal as chairman to ensure that every senator had enough time to ask any question that they wanted or to express any concern that they had on their mind in regards to this nomination and the qualifications of this man. I think we accomplished that. We gave every senator 20 minutes, then another 20 minutes. And then under regular order, additional time. I might add that senator wyden certainly took advantage of that. And after over eight hours, the general and the chairman and other members of the committee finally concluded. I think -- i think it was a good hearing. I think it was a good open hearing and a good closed hearing, and i think that generalhayden certainly distinguished himself. And i think that he showed the committee that he will be an outstanding choice for c.I.A. Director. Generalhayden entered active duty in terms of background with u.S. Air force in 1969 after earning both his bachelors and master's degree from duquesne university in his hometown of pittsburgh. He has had a lengthy and diverse career. He served as commander of the air intelligence agency, as director of the joint command and control warfare center. He has been assigned to senior staff positions at the pentagon, at the headquarters of the u.S. European command, the national security council, and at the u.S. Embassy and the people's republic of bulgaria. General hayden has also served as the deputy chief of staff at the united nations command and u.S. Forces in korea. And more importantly, mr. President, he has served most recently at the highest levels of the intelligence community. From 1995 -- pardon me. From 1999 to 2005, generalhayden was the director of the national security agency. Finally, in april of last year following intelligence reform and a great deal of committee action in regards to the intelligence committee to determine the accuracy of our 2002n.I.E. National intelligence estimate, and then we went through intelligence reform. We had the 9/11 commission, and we had the w.M.D. Commission appointed by the president, he was unanimously confirmed by this body to serve in his current position as the principal deputy as the director of national intelligence. Had that kind of background, had that kind of expertise, had that kind of experience. So given his service at n.S.A. And the office of director and national intelligence, i don't think there's any question that general hayden is well known to the intelligence committee. He has briefed as many times -- i don't know of anybody or any hearing that has done any better. It is because of his qualifications and my experience working with him that i support his nomination. Mr. President, this nomination comes before the senate at a very crucial time. We are a nation fighting a war in which the intelligence community is on the front lines. The c.I.A. Is an integral and very vital part of the intelligence community. We need strong leadership in order to protect our national security. When general hayden takes the helm at the agency, he's going to find a number of issues that command his attention. These are the same issues that he we touched on and asked the general to respond during his confirmation hearings. First, he must continue to improve the agency's ability to provide public policy-makers with high-quality analytic products. The senate intelligence committee's july 2004 report on intelligence that was related to iraq's w.M.D. Programs did conclude that the agencies of the intelligence community did not explain to policy-makers the uncertainties behind their iraq w.M.D. Assessments. Analysts must also observe what i refer to as the golden rule of intelligence, intelligence And we asked this specifically analysis. of the general. "Tell me what you know. Tell me what you don't know. Tell me what you think. And most importantly, make sure that we understand the difference." It will be up to generalhayden to ensure that the c.I.A. Analysts adhere to this rule in the future. Second, by general hayden must improve the c.I.A.'S ability to collect what we call human intelligence, he can begin by ensuring that the agency is more aggressive in its efforts to penetrate hard targets and in the use of very innovative collection platforms. Third, by general hey den seems to me must improve information access. Not information sharing. Information access. There's a big difference. We will look on the intelligence committee to the general to ensure that appropriately cleared analysts all community-wide with the need to know and the proper training have access to c.I.A. Information in its earliest form, while at the same time protecting sensitive sources and methods. No doubt the general will face a number of significant tasks, but based on his record as a manager, his qualifications and his demonstrated leadership, i believe he is the right choice to lead the c.I.A. The senate should expeditiously confirm him and let him get to work over at langley. Mr. President, i strongly support the nominee, and i urge my colleagues to do the same. I yield the floor. Mr. Wyden: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from oregon. Mr. Wyden: mr. President, i think i'm next in line, but i understand that the majority leader and the distinguished senator from nevada would like to have a brief colloquy, and i will defer to them and pick up when they're done. The presiding officer:

the majority leader. Mr. Frist: and we will be very brief. Mr. President, i ask consent that during this evening's session it be in order for senators to speak in executive session on the kavanaugh nomination number 632 or thehayden nomination number 672. Provided further that following the disposition of the kavanaugh nomination, the senate proceed to a vote on thehayden nomination, number 672. Further, if number 672 is confirmed, then the senate immediately proceed to a vote on the confirmation of calendar number 693. I further ask consent that following those votes senator nelson of florida be recognized to speak for up to five minutes and the senate then proceed to cloture vote with respect to executive calendar number 630, dirk kempthorne to be secretary for the interior. Provided further if cloture is invoked, senator landrieu then be recognized for up to ten minutes and the senate then proceed to an immediate vote on the confirmation of the nomination of dirk kempthorne. The presiding officer: is there objection? Without objection, so ordered. Mr. Frist: mr. President, what all of this means is that by that agreement, we will allow senators to speak tonight on either the kavanaugh nomination or thehayden nomination. We will convene tomorrow morning at 8:45. At 8:45 tomorrow morning. It is our hope that we'll be able to vote on the confirmation of the kavanaugh nomination after convening. We would then proceed to the votes on thehayden nomination and the cloture vote on the kempthorne nomination. Senators, therefore, can expect three early roll call votes during friday's session.

Mr. Wyden: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from oregon is recognized. Mr. Wyden: mr. President, before he leaves the chamber, i simply want to say to the distinguished chairman of our committee that i thank him for his kind and gracious introductory remarks to me. As he knows, sometimes we agree, as we did in the effort to make public the c.I.A. Inspector general's report on 9/11. And i've appreciated working with the distinguished chairman on that. Sometimes we disagree, as we do tonight with respect to the nomination of generalhayden. But chairman roberts has always been a courteous and fair in our committee and es-pbgsly -- essentially to every member, and i want to thank him for that as he leaves the chamber tonight. Mr. President, clearly chairman roberts and senator hatch, two distinguished members of our intelligence committee, want no part of it, but there are those who want to turn thehayden nomination into a referendum on who's toughest on terrorism, republicans or democrats. These people do america a disservice. I know of no senator who sympathizes with the terrorists. I know of no senator who wishes to coddle al qaeda. I know of no senator who is anything other than a patriot. Unfortunately, this nomination is being used to divide the senate and the american people on the issue of terrorism. Just this past monday the "washington post" newspaper reported that the white house -- and i quote here -- "seems eager for a battle over the nomination of air force general michael d. Hayden as c.I.A. Director." The article goes on to say -- and again i quote -- "the white house hopes voters will see the warrantless surveillance program hayden started as head of the national security agency as tough on terrorism rather than a violation of civil liberties." Mr. President, i believe the american people deserve better than the white house agenda of false choices. I believe one can fight the terrorists ferociously and protect the liberties of law-abiding americans. I believe the senate should not be bullied into thinking that security and liberty are mutually exclusive, and i believe that millions of americans share that view. From the days of ben franklin, security and liberty in america have been mutually reinforcing, and it is our job to maintain this sacred balance. This is harder to do now because across america there is less trust and there is more fear. The lack of trust has been fed by the bush administration telling the public that they have struck the right balance between security and liberty, but then we have had one media report after another that contradicts that claim. When the media reports come out, the administration says it can't say anything because responding would help the terrorists, but then the administration responds in multiple forms to get out the small shards of information that they believe is helpful to their point of view. The increased fear among our people is nourished by the fact that there are no independent checks on the government's conduct as there have been for more than 200 years in america. Law-abiding americans have no reason to be confident that anyone is independently verifying reports about the administration's reported surveillance of their personal phone calls, e-mail and internet use. All of this mistrust and fear has become translated into a lack of credibility. The administration has given us by words and deeds a national security routine -- do one thing, say another. An absolute prerequisite to running intelligence programs successfully is credibility. Despite the scores of talented, dedicated, patriotic people working at langley today, the failings of the agency's recent leadership have left the agency's credibility diminished. The agency, mr. President, is now looking at the prospect of its fourth director since 9/11, the last director brought partisanship and lost talented professional staff as a result. The agency's number-three man who resigned this month is being investigated by the f.B.I. For links to the bribing of a former congressman. It is long past time to get it right at the c.I.A. This will be the second time i have voted on ahayden nomination. The first time around when he was nominated to serve as deputy national intelligence director i voted for the general. In my view, general hayden's technical knowledge is, not in question. He has always been personable in any discussions the two of us have had, and he has always been extremely easy to talk to. But mr. President, since i last voted for him, information has come to light that has raised serious questions about whether the general is the right person to lead the c.I.A. Serious questions about whether the general will continue to be an administration cheerleader, serious questions regarding his credibility, serious questions about his understanding of and respect for constitutional checks and balances and the important accountability in government that they create. Here are the facts, mr. President: last december "the new york times" reported that since 9/11 the national security agency, which general hayden was in charge of at the time, initiated a warrantless wiretapping program. Generalhayden reported once more in the media to be the architect of the program became the main public spokesperson in its defense. In a white house press conference in december 2005 and at subsequent events, including a speech at the national press club this past january, the general vigourously defended the administration's warrantless wiretapping program. Now, even before the war in iraq, i was concerned about politicizing intelligence. Since then i think there are only additional gowdz for concern -- grounds for concern. At his confirmation hearing, general hayden said he wants to get the c.I.A. Out of the news. To me this was a curious statement given all the time he has spent on the bully pulpit defending the president's warrantless wiretapping program. Inevitably any political appointee will have an allegiance to the white house that appointed him or her, but when it comes to positions in the intelligence community, i believe that this allegiance, regardless of whether a republican or a democrat is in the white house, should go only so far. It's not good for our great country to have a c.I.A. Director who jumps into every political debate that comes up here in washington, washington, d.C. It's not good for our great country to have a c.I.A. Director who willingly serves as an administration cheerleader. It's not good for our great country to have a c.I.A. Director who gets trotted out again and again and again to publicly argue for the president's controversial decisions. Politicizing the position renders the c.I.A. Director less effective and less credible. Inevitably americans will begin to see the director as an administration defender rather than a conveyor of the unvarnished truth. And in our next c.I.A. Director we need more truth, and we need less varnish. My second concern rises out of the first. Not only has generalhayden raised questions through his words and actions about politicizing intelligence, but unfortunately even when he says something, we cannot trust based on his words that what he says is credible, that the national press club -- at the national press club speech he gave in january defending the n.S.A. Warrantless wiretapping program, the general repeatedly stated that the program was limited to international to domestic or domestic to international calls. For instance, he said -- and i quote -- there's always a balancing between security and liberty. We understand that this is a more, i'll use the word "aggressive" program than would be traditionally available under It is also less intrusive. fisa. It deals only with international calls. "Later generalhayden said -- quote -- "that's why i mentioned earlier that the program is less intrusive. It deals only with international calls." He explained -- quote -- "the intrusion into privacy, the intrusion into privacy is significantly less. It's only international calls." He added -- and i quote -- "we're talking about here communications we have ever reason to believe are al qaeda communications, one end of which is in the united states." At the conclusion of the press club address, he was asked by a reporter, "can you assure us that all of these intercepts had an international component and that at no time were any of the intercepts purely domestic." The general said -- and again i quote -- "the authorization given to n.S.A. By the president requires that one end of the communications has to be outside the united states. I can assure you by the physics of the intercept, by how we actually conduct our activities that one end of these communications are always outside the united states of america." With those final words, the speech and the press conference concluded, but then, mr. President, just weeks ago, americans read in the "u.S.A. Today" newspaper that the n.S.A., According to the paper, was gathering basic information concerning hundreds of millions of innocent americans' domestic phone calls. I cannot confirm or deny what was in that article, but i can tell you when i opened the paper that morning and read the article it raised serious concerns for me about whether the general had been misleading. Unfortunately, this is not a single incident in an otherwise perfect record. There is a pattern of saying one thing and doing another when it comes to the general. For instance, generalhayden says he received legal authority to tap american's phone calls without a warrant in 2001. A year later in 2002, the general testified before congress's joint 9/11 inquiry that he had no authority to listen to americans' phone calls in the united states without first obtaining enough evidence for a warrant. As concede by the general himself at the time he made these statements to congress, the n.S.A. Was, in fact, doing the very thing he led us to believe it could not, engaging in warrantless wiretapping on persons here in our country. When i asked the general to explain these contradictions at his confirmation hearing, i didn't get much of a response. At best i got a nonanswer that reflected the general's skill in verbal jim -- gymnastics but not the type of candor that america needs in its next c.I.A. Director. There is another example that i want to talk briefly about, mr. President. When generalhayden came before the senate intelligence committee last year in conjunction with his nomination to serve as a deputy to ambassador negroponte, i asked him about the n.S.A. Trailblazer This has been one of the program. general's signature n.S.A. Management initiatives, one that has been again reported as one designed to modernize the agency's information technology infrastructure. In response to my questions -- i want to be specific about this because there's been a lot of discussion about it -- among a variety of other comments the general made about the trailblazer program, page 44 of the transcript of that 2005 hearing was held -- approved generalhayden to be the deputy of mr. Negroponte. The general said -- and i quote -- "with respect to the trailtrailblazer program, a personal view now looking back, we overachieved." Now, i cannot go into detail here on the senate floor because of the classified nature of the information involved, but sufficed to say today the press is reporting that the program is belly up and the press is reporting that it is a billion dollars worth of junk software. I take my constitutional responsibility to give advice and consent to the president's nominations very seriously. So last monday after the hearing, i did something that i don't customarily do. I reached out to the general once more in an effort to try to find grounds for supporting his nomination. In my office i asked that he keep the senate intelligence committee fully and currently informed of all intelligence activities other than covert actions. In writing the general responded -- and i quote -- "regarding communications with congress on critical issues, if confirmed as director of the central intelligence agency, i intend to have an open and complete dialogue with the full membership of the committee as indicated by 501-c, 502 and 503 of the national security act as amended." So far so, but then the general added, "as you understand, there will continue to be very sensitive intelligence activities and operations such as covert actions that consistent with legislative history and long-standing practice is briefed only to leadership of the committee. On those rare occasions, communications with those members will be exhaustive." So once again the bottom line, mr. President, general hayden's response is ambiguous. If confirmed he intends to sometimes inform congress and at other times only inform certain members without explaining how this will be decided or what his role in the decisions will be. x Read his response from monday and you still can't -- read his response from monday and you still can't determine when he'll brief members of the senate intelligence committee on the activities of the c.I.A. And when they'll be learning about them by reading the morning newspaper. As i stated, the c.I.A. Is looking at the prospect of its fourth director in this dangerous post-9/11 world. Serious reform is needed to get the central intelligence agency headed in the right direction. To make this happen, america needs a c.I.A. Director who says what he means and means what he says. Unfortunately, time and time again generalhayden has demonstrated a propensity for neither. His words and acts on one occasion cannot be reconciled with words and acts on another. He is a man with a reputation for taking complicated questions and giving simple answers. Unfortunately and repeatedly, when i have asked him simple questions, he's given me complicated answers or nothing at all. Mr. President, americans want to believe that their government is doing everything it can to fight terrorism ferociously and protect the legal rights and civil liberties of law-abiding americans. But right now, millions of americans are having trouble locating the checks and balances on executive power. They don't know what the truth is and they're very concerned about what's next. I believe it's time for the senate to break that cycle. I remain concerned that what has happened at the national security agency under generalhayden will be replicated at the central central intelligence agency and for that reason, mr. President, i oppose the nomination and i yield the floor. Mr. Durbin: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from illinois. Mr. Durbin: mr. President, let me commend my colleague from the state of oregon, a member of the senate intelligence committee, a committee which i served on for four years. Senator wyden's statement is consistent with his service on that committee. It shows that he takes that assignment very seriously. He does his homework in a very challenging committee assignment, and that he has given great thought and reflection to this important decision about whether generalhayden should be named to head the c.I.A. Senator wyden and i have discussed this nomination. There are some things he cannot share with me because they were learned behind closed doors in the senate intelligence committee. But i've become convinced as well that generalhayden, despite his many great attributes and good qualifications, is not the right person for this appointment. Mr. President, when we reflect on america since 9/11, there are many things that are very clear. First, this country was stricken in a way that it has never been stricken since the war of 1812, when the british invaded the united states, invaded this capitol building, sacked and burned it. We found 3,000 innocent americans destroyed on american soil, a gut wrenching experience -- a gut-wrenching experience that we'll never forget. It changed america and it called on the president and on the leadership in congress to summon the courage to respond. In the days that followed that horrible event, there were some inspiring images. We can recall the videotape of firefighters ascending the stairway into the world trade center to certain death, braving what they knew was a terrible disaster to try to save innocent lives. We can recall the president of the united states going to the rubble of the world trade center in new york and in a few brief moments rallying america and the world behind our cause. We can remember members of congress standing just a few feet away from this senate chamber, members of congress who hours before had been locked in partisan combat, put it all aside after 9/11 and sang "god bless america" and said, what can we do to save america. And then after that, the response around the world, this great giant, the united states of america, having suffered this terrible loss, was able to count its friends and allies very quickly. So many nations stepped forward and said, we're with you, we'll help you. We understand that you must bury your dead and grieve your losses but then you must defend yourself and your nation for its future, and we will be there. It was an amazing outpouring of support for our great country. It was a wonderful and encouraging moment. The president came to this congress and gave a speech shortly after 9/11 that i will say was one of the best that i'd ever heard. Summoning us to gather together as a nation and defend ourselves against this threat of terrorism. And then, of course, we considered the patriot act. We changed the laws of america so that our government would have new tools to pursue the terrorists. It passed with an overwhelming bipartisan vote very quickly. And we started to roll up our sleeves and take on this task. At the time, i was a member of the senate intelligence committee. I realized then more than ever how important that committee was. Intelligence is the first line of defense, and good intelligence used wisely can protect america from terrorism and from enemies who would inflict great casualties and pain on us. And then a few months later came a new challenge, a challenge we had not anticipated on 9/11. The president and this administration told us that the real battle was against saddam hussein in iraq. And i remember sitting in that senate intelligence committee just days before the vote on the senate floor about the invasion of iraq and turning to a staffer who tossed me, "senator, something's unusual here. This is the first time we've ever considered any kind of effort of this magnitude without asking the intelligence agencies of the united states to tell us what they know so that we can gather information from every source and make a conscious and sensible judgment about what we should do. It's called a national intelligence estimate, an n.I.E. And so at my staffer's prompting, i requested a national intelligence estimate, as did senator graham of florida. It turned out it was routine to produce that but no one had taken the time to do that before the invasion of iraq. Well, in very short order -- just a few weeks -- a national intelligence estimate was committed to the intelligence committee. There were claims in that n.I.E. That turned out to be false. But at the time, we didn't know it. There were claims about weapons of mass destruction that threatened the safety of the united states of america. There were claims of capacities and capabilities by saddam hussein and iraq that were greatly exaggerated. There were claims that saddam hussein and the iraqis were producing nuclear weapons which could be used against the united states. Leaders in the white house were telling us they were fearful of mushroom clouds that could result in a nuclear holocaust. All of this was given to the american people and the intelligence committee. The sad reality was when we sat in the intelligence committee, we knew behind closed doors that the american people weren't giving the -- getting the full story. That in fact even within this administration, there was dispute as to the truth of these statements, statements being given every day and every night by the leaders of this administration. Well, we know what happened. We invaded iraq. Saddam hussein in a matter of weeks was gone as their dictator and we came to learn that all of the claims about weapons of mass destruction were false. Totally false. The american people had been misled. There is nothing worse in a democracy than to mislead the people into war and that is what happened. We learned as well that there were no nuclear weapons. All those who claimed there was a connection between 9/11 and saddam hussein could find no evidence. The statements made by the president in his state of the union address that somehow or another saddam hussein was obtaining yellow cake or the makings of nuclear weapons from africa turned out to be false and the president had to concede that point. And then in light of it, we decided it was time to take a look. The intelligence committee, which i served on, decided to ask two questions. First, did our intelligence agencies fail us? Did they come up with bad information when they should have given us good information and good advice? Were we, in facts, misled into this war by that information? And secondly, did any member of this administration misuse that intelligence information, use it in a fashion that did mislead or deceive the american people? Two specific assignments accepted by the senate intelligence committee. The first assignment -- i served on the committee while we were in the process of meeting that obligation -- we came to learn was exactly right. The senate intelligence committee concluded, as did the house, that our intelligence agencies had failed us. Our first line of defense had failed us, giving us information that was totally flawed, information which was not reliable, information which never should have resulted in the invasion of iraq. The administration had argued that we have a new foreign policy, a preemptive foreign policy. We can't wait to be attacked, the president said. We have to attack first if there's a threat. And it turns out the information used to measure that threat was wrong in the invasion of iraq. 23 Of us in the senate voted against the use of force against iraq. 22 Democrats and one republican. We felt then, most of us, that the information being given to the american people was misleading, the intelligence information was not accurate. Well, it turns out that our estimate was true and it turns out that our invasion of iraq was based on false pretenses and on intelligence information that was fatally flawed. The second investigation to be undertaken by the senate intelligence committee promised more than two years ago -- committee, promised more than two years ago, was that we would look into the misuse of this intelligence by members of the administration. Now, that is a tough thing to ask a senate intelligence committee led by a republican chairman to do, because it is likely to bring some embarrassment to his administration. The administration of the president. And, unfortunately, as i stand here today, the promise of almost two years ago to complete this second phase has not been completed. We still don't know if members of this administration misused the intelghts. But there are things that we do know, thaingsdz are very clear -- things that are very clear. It is clear that in the leadup to the invasion of iraq and afterwards, there was a operate intelligence agency created in the department of defense by a man named douglas feith that became virtually a renegade independent operation. It was not working in concert with other agencies of our government gathering intelligence. That's inconsistent with what we hoped to be a coordinated intelligence effort in our government. But secretary rumsfeld, who enjoyed the confidence of the president, was able to initiate this intelligence operation in defiance of many other intelligence agencies. We know that for a fact. And then we came to learn several other things. We'd learned that after 9/11, the bush administration for the first time in modern history decided that they needed to rewrite the standards of interrogation for detainees. For decades, we had held to the standard, the geneva code which basically that said we would not engage in torture, cruel, inhumor degrading treatment. But the infamous into bee memo memo -- bybee memo, exchanged at the time with attorney general gonzalez, former white house counsel, was the suggestion that we could bend those rules and change those rules. That conversation, in closed sections of the white house, took place without the knowledge of the american people. But then the terrible disclosure at abu ghraib, the photographs told the story. Toarch and inhuman treatment -- torture and inhuman treatment perpetrated sadly by hose who were in -- by those who were in service to the united states. It was clear then that the issue of torture was one that was front and center for us to face as a nation, to face during this time of terror. And so with this torture issue before us, we also had other things to consider. Not long thereafter came the news that this administration was engaging in activities which clearly were beyond the law.x It is the law in the united states, under our constitution, one cannot invade the privacy through the wiretap of another without court approval. No executive branch office, the department of justice or f.B.I. Can engage in a wiretap without the approval of a court or when it comes to questions of international security, foreign intelligence gathering through the fisa court, a special court that's created for that purpose. Those are the two options. But this administration said that it was above the law. It didn't have to answer to those courts. It didn't have to work through those courts. It could engage in warrantless wiretaps through the national security agency, an agency administered by generalhayden. And then just several weeks ago the "usa today" discloses more information indicating an invasion of privacy where our telephone records of innocent american people are being gathered by the same agency, the national security age circumstance in an effort that i can't describe in detail because i've not been briefed, but in an effort to find some intelligence information. And so now comes the nomination of generalhayden to become director of the central intelligence agency. After all of this experience. Let me say at the outsectors i respect generalhayden. He is a man who served this country with distinction for over three decades.

Many say, and i cannot disagree, that he's one of the brightest minds when it comes to intelligence and the agencies that he's worked with in the past are clear evidence of that. I honor and appreciate his service. I know he's a man of considerable knowledge and formidable intellect. He's well-versed in the questions of intelligence, particularly on the most technical areas. However, i have three primary reservations about this nomination. First, i'm concerned about the role of generalhayden in the n.S.A.'S warrantless wiretapping of american citizens. Second, i'm concerned about how the c.I.A. Will treat detainees in their custody and how they'll implement the clear prohibition on torture and cruel and unusual and degrading treatment, a standard that was passed last year in the mccain amendment which i cosponsored by a vote of 90-9 opt floor of the united states senate. And i'm also concerned about the issue of the general's independence, into the merely his independence as an individual but his ability to stand up to the department of defense and the likes of general -- pardon me -- likes of secretary rumsfeld separate defense intelligence operation under douglas five. I raised these concerns when i met with generalhayden. They were echoed by many members of the members of the hearing. As director of the n.S.A., Generalhayden presided over a program that carried out warrantless wiretaps on innocent americans. Those wiretaps did not have judicial approval nor did they have meaningful congressional oversight. Precious few members of congress were briefed about the wiretaps, and they were sworn to secrecy about this procedure. Generalhayden has stated the attorney general and other legal authorities within the administration concluded these actions were proper and legal. In fact, i've seen no evidence of that whatsoever. We created a fisa court to issue warrants for the surveillance. If the administration believes the fisa court is not sufficient in this age of terrorism and high technology, the administration should come to congress and ask us to change the laws as we did with the patriot act. In addition to warrantless wiretaps, generalhayden reportedly oversaw a program that assembled an enormous database, largest in the history of the world, of literally millions of calls made by americans to americans in the united states. Tens of millions of americans appear to have been included in this data base, and most of us in congress learned about it on the front page of the "usa today". I'm disturbed by the role that generalhayden played in overseeing these practices. It is certainly critical that the director of the c.I.A. Protect our security but also not endanger our liberties. Second, i'm concerned about the way the c.I.A. Will treat detainees. When the mccain amendment was pending, it was opposed openly by vice president richard cheney, who said that he believed intel skwreplbgs agents -- intelligence agents should not be bound by the provisions of the mccain amendment. We disagree. We passed on the floor of the senate, as i said earlier, by a vote of 90-9 clear standards barring torture, cruel inhuman and degrading treatment. I believe we should never engage in that treatment, and that's what the mccain amendment requires. Senator mccain said it well last year, and i quote him. "It's not about who they are. It's about who we are. I believe we should have one clear uniform interrogation standard that applies to all u.S. Personnel. Those in uniform and those in a civilian capacity." I was disturbed when generalhayden in his meeting with me did not appear to share that view. He was evasive. While he said we have to establish clear guidelines, he indicated he might prefer to have one standard for the military and another standard for intelligence personnel. He said he wanted to study the question, but the two sets of rules might be appropriate. I disagree. There's only one standard. It should be clear and unequivocal. Finally is a question of independence. The pentagon controls an estimated 80% of the intelligence budget. That fact alone makes it critical for the c.I.A. To vigorously defend its independence over the department of defense. We need an independent voice at the c.I.A. I'd like to note that last year's intelligence authorization bill was passed by the senate intelligence committee stated that the director of the c.I.A. Should be appointed from -- quote -- "civilian life." That bill in the end never reached the floor of the senate for a vote, but we should nevertheless consider that recommendation seriously. General hayden assured me he stood up to secretary rumsfeld in the fife nomination when he disagreed with him. Those on the intelligence committee have concluded that generalhayden will assert that independence and will stand up to the pentagon. I certainly hope that he does. Within the bush administration, the question of the independence of intelligence agencies is particularly important. That's because the intelligence process has been abused. This administration clearly politicized and distorted the use of intelligence to promote the false premise that saddam hussein was tied to the 9/11 attacks and that iraq was developing weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear. We know now that was false. weapons. In 2002 the administration undermined the independence and credibility of the intelligence process by creating this office of special plans at the pentagon under the leadership of under secretary of defense douglas fife. Several of us addressed this issue as part of the intelligence committee's 2004 report on prewar intelligence assessments in iraq. We wrote, and i believe senator levin joined me in this, -- and i quote -- "the intelligence community's findings did not support the link between iraq and the 9/11 plot. Administration policy officials wanted in order to help galvanize support for military action in iraq. As a result, officials under the direction of under secretary fife took it upon themselves to push for a change in the intelligence analysis so that it bolstered administration policy statements and goals. I asked generalhayden about douglas fife and the office of special plans. To his credit, he was critical of that operation. He said it was not legitimate alternative analysis and he described a troubling pattern in which preconception shaped the search for intelligence. Generalhayden reiterated his dis-frm with the fife approach in testifying before the intelligence committee. I hope if he's confirmed, as i'm certain he will be, that he will go further in efforts to subvert the intelligence process. Today we face greater dangers than we did in 2003 when under secretary fife was operating his own intelligence shop. The war in iraq claimed over 2,400 american lives and there is no end in sight. Iran has pursued three different methods of enriching uranium, experimented with separating plutonium, moving closer toward the possible development of nuclear weapons. Osama bin laden is still at large, al qaeda splintered in different dangerous tkrebg and north korea is expanding its nuclear arsenal. All these issues make it extremely important that our intelligence community conduct independent, accurate, trustworthy analysis. And it's critical that we operate within the bound of our own constitution and our laws. We should not have one standard for the military and another for the intelligence committee, a position once argued as high in this administration as vice president cheney. We should not engage in torture or hold detainees indefinitely without ever charging them with a crime. Just two weeks ago the president of the united states said it would soon be time to close Guantanamo. That certainly is something that many of us believe is in order. Those who are dangerous to the united states should be charged and imprisoned. Those who have no value to us from an intelligence viewpoint should be released if they are not a danger to the united states. We cannot ignore the fundamental privacy rights of american citizens and the moral values and rights reflected in the treatment of those detainees. Generalhayden will be taking charge of the c.I.A. By many reports at a time when the agency is demoralized. He'll have to oversee critical reforms. Last december members of the 9/11 handed out report cards to the administration. They gave the c.I.A. An incomplete in terms of of adapting to its new mission. I hope generalhayden can change that. I hope he'll be the independent voice that we need. And, mr. President, i yield the floor. The presiding officer: without objection. Mr. Obama: thank you very much. The presiding officer: the senator from illinois. Mr. Obama: mr. President, let me start by saying that the nomination of general hayden is a difficult one for me. I generally as a rule believe that the president should be able to appoint members of his cabinet, of his staff to positions like this one that general hayden is nominated for without undo obstruction from congress. General hayden's extremely well qualified for this position, having previously served as the head of the national security agency and as deputy director of national intelligence under john negroponte. He has 30 years of experience in intelligence and national security matters. He was nearly universally is praised during his confirmation to deputy d.n.i. There are several members of the intelligence committee, including senator levin, who i hold in great esteem, who believe that senator hayden has consistently displayed the sort of independence that would make him a fine c.i.a. Director. Unfortunately, general hayden's being nominated under troubling circumstances. As the architect and chief defender of a program of wiretapping and collection of phone records outside of fisa oversight. This is a program that is still accountable to no one and no now, there is no one in this law. congress who doesn't want president bush to have every tool at his disposal to prevent terrorist attacks, including the use of a surveillance program. Every single american, democrat or republican or independent who remembers the images of falling towers and needless death would gladly support increased surveillance in order to prevent another attack. But over the last six months, americans have learned that the national security agency has been spying on americans without judicial approval. We learned about this not from the administration, not from the regular workings of the senate intelligence committee but from "the new york times" and u.s.a. Today. Every time a real revelation came out, president bush re -- every time a revelation came out, president bush refused to answer questions from congress this. Is part of a general stance by this administration that it can operate without restraint. President bush is interpreting article 2 of the constitution as giving him authority with no bounds. The attorney general and a handful of scholars agree with this view, and i don't doubt the sincerity with which the president and his lawyers believe in their constitutional interpretation, however, the overwhelming weight of legal authority is against the president on this one. This is not how our constitution is designed to give the president unbounded authority without any checks or balances. Now, we don't expect the president to give the american people every detail about a classified surveillance program, but we do expect him to place such a program within the rule of law and to allow members of the other two co-equal branches of government, congress and the judiciary, to have the ability to monitor and oversee this program. Our constitution and our right to privacy as americans requires much. Unfortunately, we were never given the chance to make that examination. Time and again president bush has refused to come clean to congress. Why is it that 14 of 16 members of the intelligence committee were kept in the dark for 4 1/2 years? The only reason that some senators are now being briefed is because the story was made public in the newspapers. Without that information, it's impossible to make the decisions that allow us to balance the need to fight terrorism while still upholding the rule of law and privacy protections that make this country great. Every democracy is tested when it's faced with a serious threat. As a nation, we've had to find the right balance between privacy and security, between executive authority to face threats and uncontrolled power. What protects us and what distinguishes us are the procedures we put in place to protect that balance. Namely, judicial warrants and congressional review. These aren't arbitrary ideas. They're not new ideas. These are the safeguards that make sure that surveillance hasn't gone too far, that somebody is watching the watchers. The exact details of these safeguards are not etched in stone. They can be reevaluated and should be reevaluated from time to time. The last time we had a major overhaul of the intelligence apparatus was 30 years ago in the aftermath of watergate. After those dark days, the white house worked in a collaborative way with congress through the church committee to study the issue, refinds intelligence laws -- revise intelligence laws and set up a system of checks and balances. It worked then and it could work now, but unfortunately thus far this administration has made no effort to reach out to congress and tailor fisa to fill the prime minister -- fit the program that has been put in place. I have no doubt that general hayden will be confirmed. But i'm going to reluctantly vote against him to send a signal to this administration that even in these circumstances, even in these trying times president bush is not above the law. No brought is above the law. I'm -- no president is above the law. I'm voting against hayden in the hope he will be more humble with the great weight of responsibility he has, not only to protect our livesious but to protect our democracy. Americans fought a revolution in part over the right to be free from unreasonable searches, to ensure our government couldn't come knocking in the middle of the night for no reason. We need to find a way forward to make sure that we can stop terrorists while protecting privacy and liberty of innocent americans. We have to find a way to give the president the power he needs to protect us while making sure that he doesn't abuse that power. It is possible to do that. We've done it before. We can do it again. Mr. President, i yield back the remainder of my time. Mr. Schumer: mr. President? The presiding officer: the senator from new york. Mr. Schumer: i ask unanimous consent i be allowed to speak for five minutes before the senator from michigan, who has graciously agreed to allow me to do that. Then he will be given as much time as he needs. The presiding officer: without objection. Mr. Schumer: thank you, mr. President. I want to first again thank carl levin, who i know has been graciously exceeding all night. So he will be the last person to speak here. But i very much appreciate it, and i know all of my colleagues do. So first i'd ask unanimous consent my entire statement be put in the record, mr. President. Because i'll give an abbreviated version. The presiding officer: without objection. Mr. Schumer: mr. President, there's so much at stake when considering nominees to the d.C. Circuit, how their ideological predilections will impact the decisions coming out of the court and why it is vital for senators to consider how nominees will impact the delicate ideological balance on the court when deciding how to vote. Given the importance of that court, mr. President, i cannot vote to confirm mr. Kavanaugh. Although mr. Kavanaugh has held several important and influential positions in government, they've been almost exclusively political, while his academic credentials are undeniably top notch, he has largely devoted his legal talents to helping notch political victories for his party. While his resume is laiding with high-profile political assignment, it's light on the kind of professional and nonpartisan accomplishments typical of recent nominees to this important court. Mr. Kavanaugh's been one of the point people among young republican lawyers appearing at the epicenter of so many high-profile controversial issues in relatively short career, and that's not in itself dispositive, but that's all there is. There is no much more we can rely on to offset this experience. Notwithstanding his legal credentials, he's younger than and has less relevant experience than almost everyone el who has joined the d.C. Circuit in modern times. If this were a nominee for the district court where it belongs, there would not be opposition, but it seems like mr. Kavanaugh's nomination is repayment for services rendered to the political operation of the white house and the republican party. He does not have a long list of articles. He does not have a long list of judicial experience or even of legal experience outside of the political realm. And it shows you the brazenness of this administration, frankly that he would be nominated to the second highest court in the land. It shows you that they value ideology and political service above judicial experience and depth. The bottom line, mr. President, is this: mr. Kavanaugh does not belong on this court, and if my colleagues on the other side of the aisle weren't so apt to just rubber-stamp every single nominee that this administration puts forward, he wouldn't get to this court. But the reason that we are unable to block this nomination is not because of the merits. I wish we could because america will regret i believe having there mr. Kavanaugh on the court for decades to come, but is it because, again, we have seen fewer than a handful of times any republican member vote against any nominee that this white house nominates. Mr. Kavanaugh's intelligent, no question. Intelligence alone is hardly a criteria for the second most important court in the land. And mr. Kavanaugh when i met him, mr. President, told me one way to make a judgment about him would be to talk to the people who know him, to talk to colleagues and judges and others familiar with his work, and that's what the american bar association actually did in preparing his evaluation, and i have rarely seen an evaluation that has comments like these: one lawyer said that mr. Kavanaugh was sanctimonious and inexperienced. A lawyer in a different proceeding said, "mr. Kavanaugh did not handle the case well as an advocate and dissembled." Another said he was inexperienced in the practice of law. Others characterized him as insulated and one lawyer who worked with him questioned his ability to be balanced and fair should he assume a federal judgeship. Unfortunately, mr. President, i think that's the reason he was chosen. The administration on this d.C. Court of appeals wants people who will not be balanced and fair. They want people who are v an ideological ax to grind, to undo the work of government which this court oversees. It is true, mr. President, that this is the second most important court in the land. It is also true, mr. President, to say that there can't be a single person in this body if they were being honest who doesn't recognize that there are many, many qualified people in washington to be on this bench. So mr. President, i must vote against this nomination with the full conviction that we could do a lot better. And with that i yield the floor and once again thank my colleague from michigan. The presiding officer: the senator from michigan.

Mr. Levin: mr. President, general hayden's nomination for director of the central intelligence agency comes at a critical time. The agency is in disarray. Its current director has apparently been forced out and the previous director, george tenet, departed under a cloud after having compromised his own objectivity and independence and that of his agency by misusing iraq intelligence to support the administration's policy agenda.p The next director must right this ship and restore the c.I.A. To its critically important mission. I will vote to confirm general hayden because his actions have demonstrated on a number of important occasions the independence and strength of character needed to fulfill the most important role of the c.I.A. Director: independence and willingness to speak truth to power about the intelligence assessments of proaflses in the intelligence -- of professionals in the intelligence community. This nomination has been considered by me on two key issues. One, whether or not generalhayden will be independent. And i believe he will, as i've said. And two, what judgment should be rendered about him based on what is known about the national security agency's surveillance program. Which he administered during his tenure as director of the n.S.A. Again, mr. President, the highest priority of the new director must be to ensure that intelligence provided to the president and the congress is objective and independent of political considerations. It was only a few years ago that then-c.I.A. Director george tenet shaped intelligence to support the policy position of the administration, and there are many examples. On february 11, 2003, just before the war, director tenet publicly stated, as though it were fact, that iraq has -- quote -- "provided training in poisons and gases to two al qaeda associates." However, we now know that the d.I.A. Had assessed -- that's the defense intelligence agency -- had assessed a year earlier that the primary source of that report was more likely intentionally misleading his debriefers and the c.I.A. Itself had concluded in january 2003, before the tenet public declaration that i've quoted, that the source of the claim that iraq had provided training in poisons was not in a position to know if any training had, in fact, taken place. On september 28, 2002, president bush said that -- quote -- "each passing day could be the one on which the iraqi regime gives anthrax or v.X. Nerve gas or someday a nuclear weapon to a terrorist group." A week later, on october 7, 2002, a letter declassifying c.I.A. Intelligence indicated that iraq was unlikely to provide w.M.D. To terrorists or al qaeda and called such a move a -- quote -- "extreme step." A very different perspective from that which had been stated by the president. But the very next day after that declassification was obtained, director tenet told the press that there was -- quote -- "no inconsistency" between the views in the letter and the president's views on the subject. His statement was flatly wrong. In his effort to minimize the inconsistency, or eliminate it, not only revealed his lack of independence but it damaged the credibility of the central intelligence agency. At a hearing in 2004, i asked director tenet about the alleged meeting between 9/11 hijacker muhammed atta and an iraqi intelligence officer in prague in april 2001. He told us that the c.I.A. Had -- quote -- "not gathered enough evidence to conclude that it had happened" and that, he said, "i don't know that it took place. I can't say that it did." What he neglected to say was that the c.I.A. Did not believe that the meeting had happened, a fact that he finally acknowledged publicly in july of 2004 -- after the war began -- when he wrote that the c.I.A. Was -- quote -- "increasingly skeptical that such a meeting occurred" and that there was a -- quote -- "absence of any credible information that the april 2001 meeting occurred." We determined later that that c.I.A. Skepticism dated back at least to june 2002, before the war. Now, director tenet also looked the other way. When the administration publicly alleged that iraq was seeking uranium from africa. As a matter of fact, he had personally called the deputy national security advisor to urge that the allegation be removed from the president's october 2002 cincinnati speech. Director tenet was silent after the president included the allegation in his january 2003 state of the union speech. And it was not until july of 2003, long after the war began, two months after president bush declared major combat operations were over in iraq, that director tenet finally acknowledged publicly that the allegations should not have been included in the state of the union speech. And according to the bob woodward book "plan of attack," when the president asked director tenet following the c.I.A.'s presentation to him in december of 2002 about its intelligence relative to iraq's suspected w.M.D. Programs, the president said, "how confident are now the intelligence about that?" Director tenet replayed -- quote -- "don't worry. It's a slam dunk." Which it surely was not. But that's what the president wanted to hear. And that's the message which director tenet presented to him and that's the message that the president then presented to the american public. Mr. President, it is essential that the new director of the c.I.A. Stand up to the administration in power no matter what administration it is when the intelligence does not support the direction that the administration wants to go. We cannot afford another iraq intelligence fiasco. General hayden has said that he'll be an independent c.I.A. Director. And based on his record, i believe him. One piece of evidence in that record, in that hayden record, relates to a strategy that the administration used to bolster its case for war. The decision was made by the administration to put a set of what was called -- quote -- "fresh eyes," to look over the intelligence relative to the alleged links between iraq and al qaeda. The secretary of defense created a separate operation in a d.O.D. Policy office led by douglas feith. While the intelligence community was consistently dubious of the links between al qaeda and iraq, the feith office scraped and scratched and cherry-picked the intelligence to produce assessments that said that there was a strong relationship between saddam hussein and al qaeda. And then mr. Feith bypassed the c.I.A., Bypassed the intelligence community and briefed that analysis to senior policy-makers at the national security council and the president's vice president's office. George tenet told us that he was not aware of that prewar briefing by mr. Feith until i brought it to his attention in february of 2004. In making its case for war with iraq, the administration used

mr. Feith's misleading intelligence to convince the country that saddam and bin laden were allies. There were few in the administration who had been willing to speak up against this bypass of the intelligence community process, a process whose very purpose is to provide balanced, objective assessments for the intelligence community. One of the few who has spoken up is generalhayden. At his nomination hearing, i asked generalhayden whether, when he was n.S.A. Director, before the iraq war he was comforted with what douglas feith was up to. And my question to generalhayden was not just about doug feith. It was about whether the general was willing to speak the truth as he saw it, even if it went against the administration's case for war. Generalhayden told the committee relative to the feith operation -- quote -- "no, sir, i wasn't comfortable." Has anyone else in the administration said that, spoken up and said that which is so obvious about the feith operation? There may be others but generalhayden is the only one that comes to mind. And this is what he then said to the committee at our hearing on his nomination. Quote -- "the possible, senator, if you want to drill down on an issue and just get laser-beam focused and exhaust every possible ounce of evidence, you can build up a pretty strong body of data, right? But you have to know what you're doing all right. I got three great kids, "he said, "but if you tell me to go out and find all the bad things they did, hayden, i could build you a pretty good dossier and you'd think they were pretty bad people because that's what i was looking for and that's what i'd build up." And then generalhayden said this: "that would be very wrong. That would be inaccurate. That would be misleading oil. " . " -- Misleading oil. "Wrong, inaccurate, and misleading. That's a pretty good description of douglas feith's shop's prewar intelligence. And an indictment of the intelligence to make the case administration's use of that for war. But what's interesting in particular isn't just what generalhayden said at his confirmation hearing. It's what he did at the time that the faith office was actually out looking for intelligence to try to prove their premise that there was a connection between saddam and al qaeda. Generalhayden actually placed a disclaimer on n.S.A. Reporting relative to any links between al qaeda and saddam hussein, stating that signals intelligence -- quote -- "neither confirms nor denies such a link." So while you had the administration claiming the link and doug feith scrapping around, scratching for any little bit of evidence that could prove his preordained conclusion that there was such a link, you had generalhayden saying that signal's intelligence, that we're not confirming or denying that such a link exists. In other words, we have in generalhayden more than just promises of independence and objectivity and a willingness to speak truth to power. We have somebody who has actually done so. There's another significant way in which generalhayden has spoken truth to power. When we were considering reforming the intelligence community to fix -- to fill the gaps in the cracks that existed prior to 9/11 and the iraq war, there was a major effort to derail the proposal in part because the reform legislation sought to shift some authority from the department of defense components to the new office of the director of national intelligence. And although generalhayden is a four-star general, he stood up to defense secretary rumsfeld on this issue. And it took some backbone and strength of character for him to do so. As to generalhayden remaining on active duty if he is confirmed, i would only make three points. First, he is not the first person to do so. Since the central intelligence agency was established in law in 1947, three commissioned officers have held the title of director of central intelligence intelligence. I would also remind our colleagues that the senate confirmed general colin powell to be president reagan's national security advisor even though there's no law that removes that position from the supervision or control of the secretary of defense occurred. We confirmed general powell to be the n.S.A. Security advisor to the president. Second, generalhayden has sent a letter to senator warner which states -- quote -- "i do not intend to remain in active military status beyond my assignment as director, central intelligence agency, if i am confirmed." That, mr. President, is an added assurance of independence and that he will not be shaping intelligence to please the defense department in order put himself in a better position for some future appointment in the military establishment. Third, general hayden's supervisor in his line of work as director of the C.I.A. will be, by law, ambassador negroponte, not secretary rumsfeld. And so generalhayden will not be in the military chain of command, but in the intelligence chain of command. To eliminate any doubt of that, we are including a provision in the defense authorization bill which is awaiting senate floor action to make that absolutely clear in law. Senator warner and i think it's already clear, but we're going to make it doubly clear by putting that into the pending D.O.D. Authorization bill. Now as i mentioned the second key issue, relative to general hayden's nomination is the president's domestic surveillance program. Over the past six months we've been engaged in a national debate about the appropriate limits on the government's authority to conduct electronic eavesdropping on american citizens. Generalhayden was director of the national security agency when the president authorized the program, and many of our colleagues have raised concerns about that. The administration has repeatedly characterized the electronic surveillance program as applying only to international calls and not involving any domestic surveillance. In february, for instance, the vice president said -- quote -- "some of our critics call this a domestic surveillance program. Wrong. That is knock rat, he said. It is not domestic surveillance. Ambassador negroponte said -- quote -- "this was a program ordered by the president with respect to international phone calls to or from suspected al qaeda and their affiliates. This was not about domestic surveillance." Said a ambassador negroponte. General may den found a way to significant --hayden found a way to signal that the administration has not described the entire program. When asked at his confirmation hearing whether the program the administration described as the entire program, generalhayden said that he could not answer in open session. Presumably if it were the entire program, he could have easily answered, "yes." In addition, while stephen hadley, the president's national security advisor, has said relative to the reports that phone records have been provided to the government under the N.S.A. Program, that it's hard to find a privacy issue here, generalhayden did not make that claim, and instead acknowledged that indeed privacy was an issue. And surely whatever one thinks they believe about this program, privacy is an issue. There may be some who when they understand the program believe that the privacy concerns are overridden by the security advantages. There may be others that reach the other conclusion, that conclude that whatever security advantages are achieved do not overcome the privacy intrusions that are reported to exist by those phone records being in the possession or being available to the government according to those press reports. But whatever, whatever one's conclusion; there are clearly privacy concerns involved. And general -- the general who is in front of us was honest enough, when general hayden said, "i cannot -- i cannot say there's no privacy concerns here" was telling us something which should be obvious to each one of us. Mr. President, there are remaining for me a lot of unanswered questions about the N.S.A. Program. And i've been one that's been at least partially briefed, not one of the subcommittee of seven that has been, at least the briefing has begun. But the fact is that the legal opinions about this program are not generalhayden's. They are the attorney general's. And i'm aware of no allegation that general hayden took any action that went beyond what the president authorized or what the attorney general advised was legal. There are legitimate grounds for criticism regarding this program, but such criticism should be aimed at the white house and the attorney general. The intelligence committee is in the middle of an inquiry into the program. Now that the full committee has been authorized to be briefed on the program, all of the members of the intelligence committee need to catch up to where seven of us are, which is about halfway through the briefing. We are still waiting for the administration to answer many questions that we've asked about the program. Mr. President, i would ask that the balance of my statement be inserted in the record at this point. The presiding officer: without objection. Mr. Levin: and, Mr. President, i will conclude by saying that in my view, generalhayden will be the independent director of the central intelligence agency that we so desperately need and that the country deserves. The record demonstrates his willingness to speak truth to power, and i will vote to confirm generalhayden. And i yield the floor and i note the absence of a quorum. I yield the floor. The presiding officer: under the previous order, the senate stands adjourned until 8:45 a.M. Tomorrow morning. Adjourn

1:31 P.M. EDT

MS. PERINO: Good morning, everybody. We're on our way to Mississippi, where the President will give a commencement address at the Mississippi Gulf Coast Community College. He is the first President to give a commencement address at a community college, and you have the embargoed copy, right? Okay.

This morning, just going through the President's day, he had his regular briefing this morning. He also met with several Chinese human rights activists in the Yellow Oval; we will have a photo release of that meeting.

After the speech today, the President will meet with several families of fallen soldiers.

A couple other things to put on your radar screen. Brett Kavanaugh, the President's judicial nominee for the D.C. circuit was voted out of committee today and we expect a floor vote in the coming weeks, before Memorial Day. Also, the Senate is going to pass tax relief this afternoon, and the President looks forward to signing that bill into law.

One other thing to put on your radar screen, Secretary Bodman is in Indiana today with Governor Daniels.* He is talking about ethanol. And one of the things he is doing is going over to the Indy Motor Speedway, he's promoting Ethanol Day in the Speedway. Ethanol has been used for the Indy 500 for years, but next year's car race will be fueled 100 percent with ethanol.

With that, I'll take your questions.

Q What bothers you about this USA Today story today? What bothers the White House about the USA Today story?

MS. PERINO: Well, you heard from the President. He is not confirming or denying existence of the details of that story. What he felt it was important to do today was tell the American people what the federal government is and is not doing to protect them from possible terror attacks. He wanted to tell them that the government is acting responsibly and lawfully in all of our intelligence activities.

No more questions?

Q Should the FCC look at whether they should fine these telephone companies for turning over these records?

MS. PERINO: I'd have to refer you to the FCC; I don't have a comment on that at this point.

Q Is Hayden having any more meetings today up on the Hill? Or did they cancel those because of the story?

MS. PERINO: No, I think that was a wild rumor. General Hayden has several meetings scheduled for this afternoon; I think they were trying to reschedule some from this morning to this afternoon.

Q Today --

MS. PERINO: Absolutely, General Hayden is seeing people today.

Q Do you guys feel like the story is going to impede the progress of the confirmation of Hayden on the Hill?

MS. PERINO: I think General Hayden has had a really good start to his confirmation process. He's met with several members, the feedback has been positive and we're full steam ahead on his nomination.

Q Without confirming or denying the story, there is adequate congressional oversight for all of these intelligence-gathering operations?

MS. PERINO: Yes. As the President has said -- I refer you to his statement today -- he made it clear that all appropriate members of Congress are briefed appropriately on the government's intelligence activities. And just to reiterate, the President was talking about today how we fiercely protect the privacy rights of the American people. The government is doing everything that it can, in a lawful way, to protect innocent Americans from probable terrorist attack.

There is no listening-in on domestic phone calls without court approval.

Q Does the President think that the timing of this story is related to General Hayden's pending confirmation hearing?

MS. PERINO: I would not question whether or not there were any motivations on behalf of a media organization that published the story, no.

Q The story is causing a bit of an uproar on Capitol Hill. Is this an over-reaction, if the appropriate members have been briefed?

MS. PERINO: It is true that the appropriate members have been briefed. And if you'll recall that with the terrorist surveillance program, we expanded on the Intelligence Committee, additional members of the Intelligence Committee through two sub-committees on both the House and the Senate side so that additional members would be fully briefed on that program. And that includes Republicans and Democrats. And they have been fully briefed. I can't speak for other senators and their reactions, but, of course, we'll be able to provide them as much information as possible, as we're providing to you.

Q If you're fiercely protecting Americans' rights to privacy, why would you need a database of tens of millions of American phone call records?

MS. PERINO: Well, not confirming or denying or acknowledging the substance of the story this morning in USA Today, what the President said today, all intelligence activities of the United States are limited and targeted and focused solely on al Qaeda and al Qaeda's affiliates. They are the enemy.

The government has no interest in knowing what innocent Americans are talking about on their domestic phone calls. So if you are calling to make reservations at a restaurant, and if you are calling your daughter at college, or if you are calling to plan your wedding, the government has no interest in knowing about those calls. The government is interested in finding out if al Qaeda is planning an attack in America -- you can bet that we want to make sure that we get ahead of that to prevent that and to save lives.

Q Was there any effort to get USA Today to not run the story?

MS. PERINO: I'm not going to comment on that.

Q Is the reason why you're not confirming or denying for national security reasons? Or why?

MS. PERINO: I'm not going to go beyond -- we don't comment on intelligence matters of the United States. If you look at the statement by the National Security Agency spokesperson, he reiterates the same. We don't comment on the intelligence operations or sources or methods. And that's for the protection of the American people. We have classified intelligence programs -- again, not confirming or denying any of these -- for a reason.

And the President talked again today in his statement about how the leaking of classified information in general can be harmful to national security.

No questions on the commencement address?

Q I have a question about Mississippi. Will the President still veto the supplemental if it includes that $700 million for the Mississippi railroad?

MS. PERINO: I believe I'd have to refer you back to the President's statement and to the statement of administration policy that was released by OMB. But I believe that the veto threat was on the total amount of the -- it was $92.2 billion, I believe; the President said nothing over that, or he would veto.

18. Bush likely to promote from within if reelected

Alexis Simendinger, National Journal, GovExec.com, 22 October 2004

If George W. Bush is re-elected after touting the steadiness and wisdom of his policies and the talents of his loyal subordinates during his first four years, why would he change his Cabinet by Inauguration Day? The conventional wisdom is that he won't seek a dramatic shake-up but instead might find himself promoting junior-grade officers to fill vacancies around his table.

Put another way, some White House insiders confide they can't quite picture the president ordering White House Chief of Staff Andy Card to take a broom to Team Bush in January 2005, if Bush beats John Kerry. A president so resolute about his policies, the insiders figure, is likely to remain loyal to his team. If Card knows Bush's plans for his second-term Cabinet and staff, the chief of staff believes that saying anything publicly would be appallingly presumptuous. "We'll deal with those questions at the appropriate time," Card said good-naturedly as he stepped away from the television cameras in St. Louis after the second of three presidential debates.

When pressed, however, Card conceded that he had "a pretty good idea," in part from personal conversations, whether each Cabinet secretary planned to depart of his or her own volition if Bush is re-elected, or desired to remain in some capacity for a second term. Card said he had "tasked a few people" out of his office to work on second-term staffing matters for Bush. "We will be prepared to fulfill our constitutional duties on January 20," he said, constructing a tidy sentence that affirmed the obvious in the event of a Bush victory or a Bush defeat.

If history is any guide, three-quarters of the 20 Cabinet-level positions in the Bush administration could be vacated early next year if the president wins in November. Voluntary administration turnover -- because of exhaustion, family and health concerns, or the lure of generous compensation in the private sector after serving a president -- is typical within the first two years, let alone the walk-up to a second term. "This Cabinet has been remarkably stable," said political scientist G. Calvin Mackenzie, a professor at Colby College and one of the country's acknowledged experts on presidential appointments and government ethics. Bill Clinton's Cabinet set the standard for longevity, and before him, Ronald Reagan's had an average stretch of 3.27 years -- nearly twice the average in Richard Nixon's Cabinet, and almost a year longer than the averages for Jimmy Carter and George H.W. Bush, according to research by Gettysburg College political science professor Shirley Anne Warshaw.

Although second-term reorganizations offer a natural opening for graceful exits, Bush would probably not ask for en masse resignations to clear the decks, Card told reporters this summer. "That's not his nature," he said as he veered into an evocative mixed metaphor. "It's not the president's nature to throw his old shoes away. He actually likes to wear old shoes, because they're comfortable. So I wouldn't expect him to demand that someone pull the plug in the White House and drain everyone out."

When one reporter suggested that George H.W. Bush sought blanket resignations when he succeeded Reagan, Card -- who was a member of Bush 41's White House staff -- dismissed that recollection as "a wonderful myth," adding, to collective laughter, "and sometimes, that myth is helpful."

Clinton did not seek government-wide resignations after he secured a second term in 1996, former White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said in an interview. "There was really a sense that there was no need to go through that process, because we knew who was leaving and who was going to stay, and there were not a lot of guns out." Panetta used a Cabinet meeting well before Election Day to ask Clinton's secretaries to make time for a private chat with him so he could assess "what their intentions were." Five of Clinton's Cabinet-level executives (at Justice, Health and Human Services, Education, Interior, and the Environmental Protection Agency) stayed put all eight years, a feat of stamina not seen in other modern administrations.

In Bush's case, the overlay of an ongoing war in Iraq and the broader "war on terror" makes the question of continuity a strategic question of life-and-death success or failure. To some Republican observers, Bush's Cabinet team should, out of duty to country in tough times, consider remaining on post. "Some of them act like it's an intermission of the country club -- time to go make some money," one Bush supporter sniffed. (One political advantage of continuity is the avoidance of bloody confirmation battles in what will remain a narrowly divided Senate after Election Day.)

Others watching from the sidelines wonder whether the president will want to remedy what some have identified as a serious flaw in Bush's national security team -- the ideological chasms that yawned into global view between State's internationalists and the neoconservative unilateralists driving Pentagon policy. The differences, critics lament, create unwelcome confusion about U.S. policies abroad. Bush has never evidenced impatience with his war Cabinet's frictions or failures -- and has certainly shown none of the intolerance that prompted him to fire two members of his initial economic team. One explanation may be that Bush believes that every member of his war Cabinet is invested in his goals in Afghanistan and Iraq, whereas Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill openly quarreled with the central mission of Bush's first-term economic policy, which was cutting taxes.

"There are not too many precedents in American history of presidents who think they were correct [and then change] their policies," said Al Felzenberg, a former adjunct fellow at the Heritage Foundation and the communications director for the 9/11 commission. Abraham Lincoln altered his policy during the Civil War, and Franklin Roosevelt said the only constant of the New Deal was change -- but they "were willing to change when the outcome was not producing the desired result," he added. Bush's campaign is antithetical to the notion that he believes his policies in Iraq or against terrorism are not producing the desired results.

On domestic policy, Bush's second-term agenda is in soft focus -- think tax "simplification," Social Security "reform," and expansion into high schools of the No Child Left Behind education accountability requirements. Bush's unwillingness to be explicit on the stump as he has campaigned for a second term guarantees that the electorate is not well informed, or thoroughly prepared for what he may deliver. "There is not a clearly articulated agenda for the second term, as there was in the first," said Towson University presidency scholar Martha Joynt Kumar. "That's very much in keeping with what other presidents have done, but at the same time, that's been one of the recurring perils of second terms."

Kumar -- who has extensively evaluated the best and worst of White House organizations and transitions for the practical benefit of incoming administrations -- said that second terms inevitably tend to be extensions of the first four years and wind up being less productive. "One of the hazards is that people leave an administration after the first term, and there's little memory" of many of the president's original policy steps and rationales, she added. "While you do want some turnover, at the same time you want some of the experience and institutional memory that was there in the first four years." Without a clear agenda, or some holdover talent, the organization around a president can drift into "freelancing, as we saw in the Reagan second term with Iran-Contra," Kumar said.

Stephen Moore, president of the conservative Republican political advocacy group Club for Growth, wants Bush to resist the tug of history if he puts together a second-term team. "Second terms are tough. You don't get much done administratively," he said. "When incumbents get re-elected, they get elected not on a change agenda.... I think it's very advisable to shuffle the Cabinet. You run out of gas if you stay with your existing Cabinet secretaries, so I just think it makes sense to have a fresh start."

Top White House Staff

Bush's CEO-style presidency sets policies in the West Wing, and in every corner of the executive branch. He delegates the mechanics of governing to his lieutenants -- who are working for him down the hall, not across town.

Of the 20 Cabinet-level posts in Bush's administration, the chief of staff, the budget director, the trade ambassador, and the drug-policy czar are the White House employees who have been elevated to Cabinet rank. The president's senior adviser, Karl Rove, had more say over steel tariffs, for instance, than did U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick or the Commerce Department. Education specialist and domestic policy adviser Margaret Spellings, who arrived in Washington with Bush from Texas, has arguably had more influence over education policy in the first term than did Secretary Roderick Paige. Tom Ridge may know what homeland-security protection should cost the taxpayers, but the budget director and Vice President Cheney, who heads the budget review board for the president, have the final say over how much the Homeland Security Department receives. Colin Powell may want to sway the president on affairs of state, but first, he has to run the traps with National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, who is one of Bush's near-constant companions and his gatekeeper of all international policy-making.

Ask Card whether he wants to stay or go after the election, and he gives the same response he's been offering for four years: "If I don't have 100 percent of [Bush's] confidence, I should not be his chief of staff. Unfortunately, I might not be the first person to realize I don't have 100 percent of his confidence," he says. "I have no expectation that I will or will not serve the president when he's re-elected." Card is so practiced at his answer because he gets asked so often: Four years in the post is considered amazing by the standards of the grueling modern White House. His workday begins at 5:30 a.m. and ends more than half a day later -- at least six days a week. Instead of signals that he wants out, there have been hints that Card may have the record books in mind. He once tasked his staff to research the average tenure of White House chiefs of staff. Answer? Twenty-two months.

For those wondering whether Rove expects to remain inside the White House if Bush wins, the answer is decidedly, absolutely, most definitely yes, his colleagues say. "He's thinking about Bush's legacy," not his next client, one source said.

There is no certain opinion about whether or how the president might adjust his communications operation in a second term. Some GOP observers outside the White House wish he would make a few changes, but insiders say Bush's fondness for "old shoes" extends to young Texans he enjoys being around, such as Communications Director Dan Bartlett and press secretary Scott McClellan. Bartlett, who has adopted the top-down, lips-zipped policies that counselor Karen Hughes installed in Bush's first two years, has worked for two men in his adult life -- Rove and Bush.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales reportedly has had enough after four years and is looking for a change. Gonzales has been touted as Bush's first choice for a Supreme Court vacancy (see p. 3211), yet there is speculation that the range of sticky issues he tackled for the president in the White House could make confirmation difficult. If Gonzales leaves, one of his current or former deputies could be promoted. Brett Kavanaugh, Bush's current staff secretary and the president's pending nominee to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, has been mentioned.

National Security Team

Defense Secretary -- It is hard to find anyone inside the White House or close to the political center at the Pentagon who believes that Bush will ask Donald Rumsfeld to leave the job he's held twice in his life, in the middle of a war, and even despite his 72 years. And very few expect the flinty, driven secretary to throw in the towel now. "For all his mistakes, Rumsfeld remains indispensable to the president's military agenda," said Loren Thompson, an analyst at the Lexington Institute who consults for defense contractors. "He is the primary author of military transformation, and almost every facet of success for that very ambitious concept is tied to his energy and his stature. I just don't see anybody stepping into Rumsfeld's shoes convincingly as an agent of change in the Pentagon."

Secretary of State -- A recent flurry of published comments from Colin Powell and President Bush suggests that each is warmly thinking about a longer-term relationship in their current jobs. But the more-conventional wisdom that Powell and his deputy, Richard Armitage, are poised to depart is correct, according to a former White House official. "Watch how John Danforth does at the United Nations," this source replied when asked who might succeed Powell. The former Missouri senator and ordained Episcopal minister, recently named by Bush to be U.N. ambassador, is a true conservative whom Democrats embrace for his intelligence and integrity. Although plenty of reports have speculated that Condoleezza Rice could succeed Powell, Rice's current and former colleagues insist she has little interest in the administrative challenges within the State Department culture.

National Security Adviser -- Despite outsiders' criticisms that she has been a poor manager of outsized egos and conflicting intelligence -- to the detriment of the president's foreign policy -- Condoleezza Rice's anticipated departure is viewed as entirely voluntary. "I would be surprised if she stayed in her current job," a senior White House official said. Friends believe that Rice wants to return to California, perhaps to academia, while others suggest that Bush will not want her to stray that far. Although her interest in Defense once made administration officials ponder Rice's history-making potential at the Pentagon, her mistakes leading up to and beyond 9/11 leave even her stalwart fans wondering whether she could win confirmation for such a job. Leading candidates to succeed Rice, no matter where she might go, include her deputy, Stephen Hadley ("the president has a lot of confidence in him," according to the White House official), and Robert Blackwill, Rice's coordinator for strategic planning at the National Security Council.

Director of Central Intelligence/Director of National Intelligence -- Porter Goss recently replaced George Tenet as CIA director. But the job of director of central intelligence is being turned into the (theoretically) more powerful post of director of national intelligence. The consensus speculation is that Goss will move up, leaving Bush to fill the CIA post again. But uncertainty lingers. "They'll need someone who is very familiar with the budget process and the political interplay between the administration, the intelligence community, the military establishment, and the oversight committees in Congress," said one lawyer with close ties to the Bush administration and to the intelligence world. The lawyer suggested that White House Chief of Staff Andy Card or Office of Management and Budget Director Joshua B. Bolten might be superior candidates for DNI. Under the scenario in which Goss is promoted, the betting is on Frances Fragos Townsend, the president's White House adviser on homeland security, to become the first female director of central intelligence.

Attorney General -- John Ashcroft, while useful to the president among his socially conservative base in an election year, may be expendable after re-election to appease Republicans who believe he has almost single-handedly hurt the party's reputation on immigration and civil liberties. At any rate, the debate remains over whether Ashcroft wants to leave, or Bush wants to nudge him out. Either way, the expectation is that the president may embrace a new figure to fight crime and terror and help reauthorize the USA PATRIOT Act. Names include Larry Thompson, Ashcroft's first deputy AG who just began a new job as senior vice president and general counsel at PepsiCo. He is well regarded inside the White House and could calm the department culture, but he would not be a partisan firebrand, if that's what Bush seeks in that job. Thompson, if confirmed, would be the first African-American attorney general. Mark Racicot, a former Montana governor and a top choice for AG in 2000, is high on any GOP list, in part because of his loyal and frequently broadcast services as chairman of Bush-Cheney '04. In an interview with National Journal, Racicot said he has promised his law firm he will come back after the election and prefers to be deleted from Cabinet lists. Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, a tough former prosecutor in his hometown, is on Republicans' wish list for a wide array of posts, but his freedom and lucrative new business career are probably more appealing than any job in Washington could be. Former Justice officials have suggested White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, who, according to one former administration official, wants the AG post more than he wants to sit on the Supreme Court. Bill Pryor, former Alabama attorney general and a recess appointment to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, would be the darling of the Christian Right as attorney general. He once called Roe v. Wade "the worst abomination in the history of constitutional law." That's part of why he's unlikely to get past Senate Democrats and onto the appeals bench.

Homeland Security Secretary -- The question seems to be whether Tom Ridge is ready to leave the administration to join a major consulting firm, or whether Bush might want him to stay in the administration. Smart and knowledgeable sources believe the odds are that he departs but that external events could change his mind. If Ridge goes, his undersecretary, Asa Hutchinson, has been publicly eager for the top job. Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney parlayed his experience heading security at the Salt Lake City Olympics into homeland-security expertise, including intelligence and information-gathering. He impressed Homeland Security Department officials and the White House in the process. Republicans and Democrats tout Thomas Kean, former New Jersey governor and the recent co-chairman of the 9/11 commission, as a public servant who would be stellar in almost any Cabinet post, including Homeland Security. Kean will retire from the presidency of Drew University next spring, around the time he celebrates his 70th birthday. Bernard Kerik campaigned hard for Bush in his capacity as former police commissioner of New York City, and he spoke at the president's New York convention. One source said Kerik would welcome an invitation to join a second term. Chairman of the House Select Committee on Homeland Security Christopher Cox finds himself tacked onto the list by some sources familiar with the department, but they remain unsure of Bush's sentiments and of Cox's thoughts about leaving his California congressional seat.

Economic Team

Treasury Secretary -- Insiders believe that Secretary John Snow will stay where he is, at least for another year or so. If Bush wants an overhaul of the tax code to be his domestic plum in a second term, he and his advisers have faith that Snow, who replaced Paul O'Neill, can be effective in that effort. "Snow is staying," a senior White House official said. "The president thinks he's doing a good job."

Commerce Secretary -- Bush friend Donald Evans has declined to say what he intends to do after the election, but a former White House official said Evans is definitely leaving Commerce. Evans's wife has moved back to Texas, and his son intends to finish school there, according to current and former White House officials. Among some Washington lobbyists, the speculation has been that Bush might ask Evans to be his next chief of staff, though they don't see Evans as the right fit for the job, as Bush has defined it. "My betting would be against it," says one K Street source close to the White House. "I think Don is an outside person." Others suggest that the president would want to keep his friend around in some role. The leading name to succeed Evans at Commerce is Mercer Reynolds III, the finance chairman of the Bush-Cheney '04 campaign. "I think he wants it, and he's a logical choice for the job," another well-connected lobbyist said.

Office of Management and Budget Director -- Joshua B. Bolten is definitely staying in the administration if Bush is re-elected, a senior White House official says, and if Bush wants him to stay put at OMB, he will. If Treasury is not John Snow's post for some reason, Bolten is a prospect there, and some have mentioned him as a chief-of-staff-in-waiting, since he served as Andy Card's deputy. As for who might replace Bolten, there are few guesses, since a change is not widely expected. Stephen Moore of the Club for Growth says he is itching to get Bolten out ("he's more of a political guy") and wants a real "warrior for smaller government" installed in his place. His suggestion: Donna Arduin, who has made a name for herself as a budget expert in Michigan, in Florida, and currently in California under Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger. Asked whether Bush really wants to slash spending in a second term, as conservatives urge, Moore said, "I'd like to say yes, but I don't think this is an administration that is anti-Big Government."

U.S. Trade Representative -- The prevailing assumption is that Robert Zoellick is leaving, but the guesswork about a successor is just that -- guessing. The USTR job is often a catch-all perch for defeated members of Congress or campaign advisers who didn't make the cut elsewhere in the Cabinet. In the grab bag of names: Grant Aldonas, currently undersecretary of Commerce for international trade and a former chief trade counsel on the Senate Finance Committee; and Gary Edson, former deputy assistant to the president for international economic affairs.

Domestic Policy

Health and Human Services Secretary -- Secretary Tommy Thompson initially found the job of running a federal department a tad less fulfilling than running a state, which he did in Wisconsin, but his enthusiasm increased once he settled in. Before the Medicare prescription drug measure was enacted this year, the oddsmakers were saying Thompson was headed into the private sector to make the first real money of his life. But confidants began suggesting that Bush might persuade him to stay at HHS, at least for a transition period, or even to head Transportation, which Thompson once thought he wanted. But Transportation has been so altered by the Department of Homeland Security, one Thompson friend suggested, that it is no longer the same department it was three years ago. A source close to the secretary says that Thompson, if he stays with Bush, now has his eyes on DHS if Tom Ridge departs. Possible successors are HHS deputy secretary Claude Allen, whom friends see as a proven manager who could pick up smoothly where Thompson leaves off, and Mark McClellan, head of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, a young standout in job after job. McClellan, a physician and an economist whose brother is White House press secretary Scott McClellan, started with Bush as a policy adviser in the White House and was promoted to lead the Food and Drug Administration. Gail Wilensky, a senior fellow at international humanitarian group Project HOPE who ran Medicare and was a top health care adviser to Bush 41, was runner-up for the HHS job in 2000. William Roper, dean of the School of Public Health at the University of North Carolina (Chapel Hill), is another former Medicare administrator. He ran the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention under Bush 41 and has served as an adviser to Bush 43 in both of his presidential bids. Out in the states, HHS names include New York Gov. George Pataki (if he decides not to run for president in 2008), Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, and Colorado Gov. Bill Owens.

Education Secretary -- The education establishment widely expects Roderick Paige, 71, to step down. White House education adviser Margaret Spellings has the job locked up, various sources inside and outside government report. Other suggestions gathered in interviews: former Pennsylvania schools chief Eugene Hickok, now Paige's deputy; Los Angeles schools superintendent and former Democratic governor of Colorado Roy Romer; former Michigan Gov. John Engler; Bush education adviser Sandy Kress (a more likely candidate to fill Spellings's vacancy if it emerges at the White House); and Education Department official and former Arkansas schools chief Ray Simon.

Transportation Secretary -- Norman Mineta, the lone Democrat in Bush's Cabinet, plans to leave in January, according to a senior White House official and department-watchers. At 72, with some health problems behind him, Mineta may have caught wind that Labor Secretary Elaine Chao and Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham reportedly fancy his job. Chao was deputy transportation secretary under George H.W. Bush. Michael P. Jackson, Mineta's first deputy at Transportation, could be a favorite of former Transportation Secretary Andy Card, for whom Jackson once worked. Jackson is now with the private-sector engineering firm Aecom, and colleagues say he seems content there but could be swayed by a call from Bush. If the president opts to promote from within the department, Federal Aviation Administration chief Marion Blakey is a candidate, though she would face opposition from unions after tussles over privatization of federal jobs. Two other possibilities: Federal Highway Administrator Mary Peters, the former Arizona transportation secretary; and former Texas Transportation Commission chief David Laney.

Labor Secretary -- "It was no secret that the Department of Labor was not her first choice; she wanted DOT," one industry source said of Secretary Elaine Chao. Some see her help campaigning for Bush this year as a good-soldier effort to keep a hand in beyond Election Day, perhaps for that Transportation move. If Chao departs, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission Chair Cari M. Dominguez, and George Salem, Labor's chief legal officer during the Reagan administration, are candidates to watch.

Agriculture Secretary -- No Cabinet secretary has seemed to relish denouncing John Kerry as a flip-flopper quite as much as Secretary Ann Veneman has, on her travels for the president this year, doling out millions of dollars in federal grants. "Agriculture Secretary Campaigns to Keep Job," read a Reuters headline on October 17. Veneman-watchers differ about whether she is actually miserable or "at home" at Ag, torn between her strengths (farm-trade negotiations; swift response to the first U.S. mad-cow case) and her weaknesses (farm bill flop; criticism over imported Canadian beef). If Veneman departs, farm lobbyists and others interviewed offer this list of prospects: Charles Kruze, president of the Missouri Farm Bureau (described as Karl Rove's "favorite farmer"); Allen Johnson, chief agriculture trade negotiator at the Office of the United States Trade Representative; Bill Hawks, undersecretary of agriculture for marketing; John Thune, if he loses his Senate bid in South Dakota; Texas Democrat Charles Stenholm, if he loses his House re-election bid, although some Republicans said he was passed over in 2000; and Bruce Knight, former wheat and corn lobbyist and chief of the Natural Resources Conservation Service.

Environmental Protection Agency Administrator -- Many industry sources and knowledgeable observers in the environmental community anticipate that Administrator Mike Leavitt, who succeeded Christie Todd Whitman more than a year ago, would remain in a second term. One sign that he'd like to stay in the administration: He moved his family to Washington from Utah. "He's a good, smart guy who knows how to work the system," said one agriculture lobbyist. "He'll stay because he just got there."

Energy Secretary -- Spencer Abraham will be replaced, or at least that's the consensus among lobbyists and interest groups with Energy Department business. Some blame Abraham, whom some industry lobbyists describe as difficult to work with and an ineffective representative of Bush's energy policies, for Congress's failure to pass the president's (and Vice President Cheney's) energy bill. "It's hard to be secretary of Energy and have Cheney run energy policy," one slightly sympathetic lobbyist said. Speculation is that a Republican who loses his or her race in November could succeed Abraham. Other ideas: Edison Electric Institute President Tom Kuhn, who attended Yale with Bush and raised plenty of campaign dough for his friend; Rep. Heather Wilson (the suggestion of one environmental lobbyist, who noted that many of the federal national laboratories within the department are located in Wilson's home state of New Mexico); and Tony Garza, currently the U.S. ambassador to Mexico.

Interior Secretary -- Gale Norton is widely perceived as someone who has done the White House's bidding, avoided ugly publicity, and built strong industry alliances. "There's a pretty good likelihood that she'd be asked to stay on, because Interior hasn't caused [the White House] a significant amount of trouble," one energy lobbyist offered. The only caveat is a publicized suggestion that Norton is angling for a judgeship. If she leaves, speculation revolves around current and former Western governors, such as Idaho's Dirk Kempthorne or Colorado's Bill Owens. An agriculture source, however, asserted that Kempthorne irritated the White House in 2003 when he lobbied to be EPA administrator, a job that went instead to Mike Leavitt.

Housing and Urban Development Secretary -- Both political parties often put mayors on their short lists to manage the challenging Department of Housing and Urban Development, but don't bet on a mayor in a second Bush term, said Bruce Katz, vice president and director of the Metropolitan Policy Program at the Brookings Institution. "Former mayors are people who run things, who have been in charge," said Katz, who was chief of staff to Henry Cisneros, former Clinton HUD secretary and mayor of San Antonio. "It's hard to dictate to them." And Katz asserts that Bush is not looking for a newsmaker. "The next HUD secretary in the Bush administration will be told, 'Cut the budget and follow our direction.'" HUD observers close to housing issues expect Secretary Alphonso Jackson to stick around, at least for a year or so, in a new Bush term. Jackson, who as deputy secretary was appointed to the top spot when Mel Martinez departed in 2003 to seek a Senate seat in Florida, is a pal from Bush's Texas days. Though Jackson managed the housing authorities in Dallas and St. Louis, he is viewed as a "stopgap appointment" among housing insiders. Fights over housing choice voucher reform and further agency budget cuts will get ugly in a second Bush administration, and HUD will need a leader who can reach out to both parties. A long-shot successor if Jackson steps down is Charlotte, N.C., Mayor Patrick McCrory, president of Republican Mayors and Local Officials.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legal Counsel

Washington, D.C. 20530

March 18, 2019

Sam Simon
Chief Counsel
Senator Richard Blumenthal, Ranking Member
Subcommittee on Oversight, Agency Action, Federal Rights, and Federal Courts Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Re: FOIA Tracking No. FY18-178; Blumenthal v. NARA, D.D.C. No. 18-cv-2143

Dear Mr. Simon:

This letter partially responds to your August 8, 2018 Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") request to the Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") and others on behalf of ten members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, seeking four categories of records "involving Brett Kavanaugh during his time as an associate in the White House Counsel's office from January 2001 to July 2003 and as White house Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006." As you know, the request is also the subject of the above-captioned litigation.

As agreed through counsel, OLC has completed processing those responsive records appearing in the first two "Priority Tiers" as identified by your counsel on September 21, 2018. OLC identified 69 records totaling 398 pages. We have enclosed 39 records totaling 124 pages with redactions pursuant to FOIA Exemption Five, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), or FOIA Exemption Six, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6). For your information, Exemption Five exempts material protected by the attorney-client, deliberative process, and presidential communications privileges, as well as the attorney work product doctrine and other privileges. Exemption Six exempts material the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. We have withheld in full nine records totaling 18 pages pursuant to Exemption Five. We have determined that none of the withheld material is appropriate for discretionary release.

Finally, we have referred the remaining 21 records, totaling 256 pages, to the Office of Information Policy ("OIP") for direct response to you. OIP may be reached as follows: Douglas Hibbard, Chief, Initial Request Staff, Office of Information Policy, Department of Justice, Suite 11050, 1425 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530, Tel: (202) 514-FOIA.

For your information, Congress excluded three discrete categories of law enforcement and national security records from the requirements of the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(c). This response is limited to those records that are subject to the requirements of the FOIA. This is a standard notification that is given to all our requesters and should not be taken as an indication that excluded records do, or do not, exist.

Your counsel may contact Stephen Pezzi of the Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch, at 202-305-8576 or at stephen.pezzi@usdoj.gov, to discuss any aspect of your request. Additionally, you may contact the Office of Government Information Services ("OGIS") at the National Archives and Records Administration to inquire about the FOIA mediation services they offer. The contact information for OGIS is as follows: Office of Government Information Services, National Archives and Records Administration, Room 2510, 8601 Adelphi Road, College Park, Maryland 20740-6001, e-mail at ogis@nara.gov; telephone at 202-741-5770; toll free at 1-877-684-6448; or facsimile at 202-741-5769.

Although your request is the subject of ongoing litigation, and administrative appeals are not ordinarily acted upon in such situations, I am required by statute and regulation to inform you of your right to file an administrative appeal. You may administratively appeal by writing to the Director, Office of Information Policy ("OIP"), United States Department of Justice, Suite 11050, 1425 New York Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20530-0001, or you may submit an appeal through OIP's FOIAonline portal by creating an account on the following web site: <https://foiaonline.regulations.gov/foia/action/public/home>. Your appeal must be postmarked or electronically transmitted within 90 days of the date of my response to your request. If you submit your appeal by mail, both the letter and the envelope should be clearly marked "Freedom of Information Act Appeal."

Sincerely,

Paul P. Colborn

This is to help get you started in circulating Barr memo to dept GC's.

Also, please add Brad's name to mine as a possible contact in this office when you send around the Barr memo. He will be handling a lot of this work as well (and is already, as you know).

FYI: I will be out the week of the 20th. My cell is (b) (6)

Subject: Gov. Ridge Testimony -- Ari's Comments Yesterday

Brett, following up on the points you and Brad raised this morning, att'd FYI are Ari's comments yesterday on this subject:

Q Thank you, Ari. Director Ridge has made a -- what is being termed a compromise offer to meet with lawmakers and answer their questions about the budget. Already there are indications from Senate Democrats, including Senator Byrd, that his compromise offer is less than what they are looking for. Could you explain the administration's rationale behind the so-called compromise that he offered, and what do you make of the criticism of the compromise?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, this is just one more example of how Governor Ridge and this administration have provided and will continue to provide a free flow of information to the Congress, to answer any and all questions they have about homeland security.

Q Why not do it through the committee structure then?

MR. FLEISCHER: That's an old issue that the President has dealt with directly. And the request by the Congress, even though they're already receiving the answers to their questions, to change the traditions which have worked very well between the Congress and the executive, on testimony by assistants to the President, is a request that cannot and will not be ignored. The President has made that clear.

I think what's so unusual here is that Congress is receiving all this information. Governor Ridge has made another effort to provide information to the Congress. But the President hopes that the Congress' message back will not be, my way or the highway, we'll only do it our way. And this administration will continue to work closely with the Congress, to work with the leadership, to work with Senator Byrd, to work with Senator Stevens, and we're hopeful that a good accommodation can be reached.

Q Do you think that the Senate Democrats then are playing politics with the Homeland Security budget, and information relating thereto?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, I don't think so. I think this is really a classic executive legislative issue involving longstanding issues in our federal system between the branches of the government. But that's, again, another reason why the President thinks it's so important not to change something that has worked very well, involving who the Congress has the right to call down for testimony. That has not extended previously to advisors to the President. It applies to the operational officers of the government. It applies to the Cabinet Secretaries.

But the only instances, in modern times, of senior advisors to the President testifying are in either cases where there's been allegations of some type of official or personal wrongdoing. That's not the case here, or anything close to that. And so this is a dramatic break from the way Congress usually does its business. And the President is resisting that, and will continue to, for good reason.

Q What's the current offer?

MR. FLEISCHER: Governor Ridge has been talking with Senator Byrd and others, and has sent a letter up to the Hill, where he has made clear that he would be available to meet with any number of congressional leaders, congressional members, House and Senator, whatever numbers they decide, all of them, if that's what they sought, in a public forum. And so the questions could be -- the American people could watch and see it and hear it.

Q A single appearance with all 535 members of the Congress, or is this for a number of appearances --

MR. FLEISCHER: I'll get you a copy of the letter, Jim. I think it was made available yesterday.

Paul, under Department rules and practices over the years, it has been ok for departing employees to take with them copies of Department documents, including privileged documents, if they have the written approval of their component head and they sign a nondisclosure agreement. Can you have someone check OSG records to see if they contain an approval document and nondisclosure agreement pertaining to Miguel?

(Toward the end of the last administration, the Department tightened up the rules and practices and limited the kinds of privileged material that could be taken. The Department did not permit Walter Dellinger or Seth Waxman to take the kind of documents at issue here. But these restrictions were not in effect when Miguel left.)

I just talked to Miguel, and it turns out that he does have a few computer disks containing some of his appeal recs. He doesn't have a computer on which these disks are readable, but he can tell from the labels that they have appeal recs.

I've told Miguel not to do anything for now.

I was slated to appear on a Heritage panel this afternoon starting at 4:30. I no longer can do it because I have to stick around here for something according to my boss. Can one of you take my place? I think Alex Azar is also on the panel. It's basically a mid-term review of Administration. No prep required and a good group. It is out at Landsdowne Resort. Let me know if any can/want to do it. THANKS.

First the Senate, Now the Courts of Appeals By NEIL A. LEWIS

WASHINGTON ? DEMOCRATS and Republicans may argue over whether voters provided a mandate for President Bush to further shift the ideological balance of the nation's courts in a conservative direction when they elected a Republican majority in the Senate. But both sides agree that such a change is exactly what is about to happen.

The most profound and early changes are likely to occur in the 13 federal appeals courts, the level just below the Supreme Court, where 25 of the 179 seats are now vacant. Because the Supreme Court has been deciding ever-fewer cases each year, the rulings from the appeals courts ? also known as circuit courts ? are increasingly the last word on many contentious cases, like those involving environmental rules and federalism.

Republican appointees now hold the majority in seven of the 13 courts, Democrats on two. Four are roughly balanced, but not for long.

Beginning early next year, the Senate Judiciary Committee will be humming. Senator Orrin G. Hatch, the Utah Republican who will regain the chairman's spot, promises that President Bush's nominees will receive quick consideration.

In an interview, Mr. Hatch appeared to dismiss the notion that Democrats might still be able to block Mr. Bush's nominees under the "blue slip" policy of polling senators from the nominees' home states. When the committee was in Democratic hands, Mr. Bush's nominees were sometimes blocked if a senator withheld consent by delivering a negative blue slip.

"Negative blue slips will be given substantial consideration," he said. "But they will not be dispositive unless there wasn't consultation" between the White House and the senator. Translation: the White House will inform a Democratic senator that it intends to nominate someone from his or her home state, but the Judiciary Committee can ignore the senator's objections.

"I'm going to get those courts filled," Mr. Hatch said, adding that a priority would be to win the

...I'm going to get those courts filled," Mr. Hatch said, adding that a priority would be to win the confirmations of Charles W. Pickering Sr. and Priscilla R. Owen to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit based in New Orleans. Both candidates were rejected by the committee when it was under Democratic control.

Still seething, Republicans are not prepared to show any mercy now.

"There is no interest in compromise," lamented a senior Democratic Senate aide. Said a senior Republican counterpart: "We pretty much don't need to compromise."

A White House official said that given the harsh feelings, the president will not be greatly bothered if his nominees are confirmed with only a bare majority.

There is much at stake. The District of Columbia Circuit, for example, is widely regarded as second in importance to the Supreme Court, handling important regulatory matters as well as most of the big scandals of the last few decades, from Watergate to Iran-contra. The Second Circuit, which is based in New York, decides many important business issues. And the Ninth Circuit, which covers California and eight other Western states, has had a rich diet of environmental cases.

Most cases that come before the appeals courts are decided by three-judge panels, so an increase in the proportion of Republican appointees means a greater likelihood of a panel with a conservative bent. Here are some anticipated changes:

D.C. Circuit

There are eight active judges in the D.C. Circuit, four of whom were appointed by Republican presidents and four by Democratic presidents. There are four vacancies. Mr. Bush has nominated Miguel Estrada and John Roberts, experienced Washington lawyers whose nominations have been delayed by Democrats. The change of power in the Senate is expected to end the delays.

The White House has also thought about nominating another conservative Washington lawyer, Peter D. Keisler, a Maryland resident who is a former president of the Federalist Society, an organization of conservative lawyers. He was once proposed for the Fourth Circuit, but the White House did not press the nomination after Senator Paul S. Sarbanes, a Maryland Democrat, complained that Mr. Keisler was not a member of the Maryland bar.

Fourth Circuit

Based in Richmond, Va., this appeals court, which covers Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the Carolinas, is already heavily weighted with conservatives and, with three vacancies, will likely become more so. Terrence W. Boyle, a federal trial court judge in North Carolina and a former aide to Senator Jesse Helms, the North Carolina Republican who is retiring, will almost certainly be confirmed. His nomination had been held up by his other home state senator, John Edwards, a Democrat.

The White House may also revive the notion of nominating Brett Kavanaugh, a White House lawyer. Mr. Kavanaugh was never nominated because Democrats found him unpalatable; he was a principal author of the Starr report, which argued that President Clinton deserved to be impeached.

Sixth Circuit

On the appeals court based in Cincinnati, which handles cases from Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee, the two Democratic senators from Michigan, Carl M. Levin and Debbie Stabenow, used their blue slips to block confirmation of two Bush nominees: Jeffrey S. Sutton, an Ohio lawyer who has been a leading litigator in challenging Congress's authority to impose rules on the states, and Deborah L. Cook, an Ohio Supreme Court justice. With seven of the circuit's 16 seats vacant, the confirmation of the two nominees will be a priority.

"I'm going to be fair and diligent," Mr. Hatch said of what will happen next year. "But I think the lesson of this election is that the people don't want the Senate to unnecessarily interfere with the president's judicial selections."

Bush Ally Is Top Contender for Nomination to Supreme Court

If a vacancy occurs as anticipated, Alberto Gonzales could become the first Latino justice.

By David G. Savage
Times Staff Writer

December 30 2002

WASHINGTON -- White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, the soft-spoken son of migrant farm workers, has emerged as the overwhelming favorite for a Supreme Court nomination in the months ahead, a move that would give President Bush a historic and politically powerful chance to name the first Latino to the nation's highest court.

Gonzales' ascension has been remarkable ? from a childhood home without hot running water, to Harvard Law School, to the White House. He has been a trusted friend of the president since Bush recruited him as a general counsel when he was elected governor of Texas in 1994.

Now the 47-year-old former Texas Supreme Court justice is in charge of the process for recommending a Supreme Court nominee.

Two years ago, Dick Cheney, another trusted Bush advisor, was put in charge of selecting a running mate for Bush and emerged with the job.

The process could repeat itself.

"He has a huge lead over everyone else," one administration official said of Gonzales.

If Bush names Gonzales to replace Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, a prospect that is becoming more likely, conservatives worry that the president will shift the high court to the left, not the right, on key issues such as affirmative action and abortion.

The usual speculation over a Supreme Court vacancy grew more intense after November, when

The usual speculation over a Supreme Court vacancy grew more intense after November, when Republicans retook the Senate. Rehnquist, 78, had said he preferred to step down when a Republican president could fill his seat.

And all of the justices say they do not want to retire during a presidential election year. So, if 2004 is out, that means 2003 is the year for Rehnquist and possibly Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, to retire.

Rehnquist has been hobbled by knee surgery since late November. A few days before Christmas, the chief justice, walking slowly with a cane, went to see Bush at the White House. The unannounced visit has only heightened speculation that he will retire at the end of the court's term in late June.

Rehnquist took his seat on the Supreme Court in January 1972, the fourth and final nominee of President Nixon.

He compiled an unwaveringly conservative record on matters ranging from crime and the death penalty to abortion, religion, affirmative action and free speech. President Reagan elevated him to be chief justice of the United States in 1986.

Rehnquist is fond of saying that as chief justice he has only one vote, the same as his eight colleagues. But filling Rehnquist's seat as chief justice could pose a special problem for the White House. At first glance, some legal experts say Gonzales lacks stature and experience as a federal judge. But other options also do not appear promising on second glance, administration lawyers say.

One popular choice would be to elevate O'Connor, the first woman to serve on the high court. If Bush named her to replace Rehnquist and chose Gonzales to fill her seat, the president would get credit for two historic firsts. O'Connor would be the first woman to head a branch of the U.S. government.

But in a television interview this year, O'Connor herself offered the best counterargument. "I'm too old," she replied firmly when asked about her possible promotion.

Conservatives would be happier if Bush promoted Justice Antonin Scalia, 66. While O'Connor has voted to preserve the right to abortion, the ban on official school prayers and the Miranda decision that allows criminal suspects to remain silent, Scalia has voted to reverse all three.

Scalia, along with Rehnquist and Justice Clarence Thomas, form the court's conservative wing. During the presidential campaign, Bush cited Scalia as his favorite justice.

But liberal activists and Senate Democrats could unite against a Scalia nomination. An easy confirmation for Gonzales would turn into a bitter fight if his nomination is coupled with Scalia's elevation.

"It would be a risk to go with Scalia. I wonder whether the Senate would confirm him," said Nan Aron, who heads the liberal Alliance for Justice.

Liberal Republicans, such as Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, played a key role in killing the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert Bork in 1987. A supporter of abortion rights, Specter said he wouldn't vote for a court nominee who was determined to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

Scalia has vowed to oppose the abortion right at every opportunity. Specter, a senior Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, would stand as an important obstacle to his confirmation.

If Rehnquist and O'Connor were to retire in the spring, Bush could nominate J. Harvie Wilkinson, the chief judge of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in Virginia.

He is a well-liked and highly esteemed conservative judge whose past includes clerking for Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, working as a lawyer in the Reagan administration and serving as editorial page editor at the (Norfolk) Virginian-Pilot.

Wilkinson, 58, has been at the top of the White House list of candidates. Two weeks ago, Gonzales chose as deputy White House counsel David Leitch, a 41-year-old lawyer who clerked for Wilkinson and Rehnquist.

But unlike with Gonzales, Bush would not get a political boost from naming Wilkinson to the Supreme Court.

Other leading candidates include Arizona Republican Sen. Jon Kyl, a favorite of Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft; Deputy Atty. Gen. Larry Thompson; and Judge J. Michael Luttig, a conservative who worked in the first Bush White House.

Last year, conservatives focused their hopes on Miguel Estrada, a native of Honduras and Bush's nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. If he had been confirmed, he could have emerged as an alternative to Gonzales. But the Democrats have stalled his confirmation, leaving the way clear for Gonzales.

He was born in San Antonio, the second of eight children of Pablo and Maria Gonzales. The two had met as teenage farm workers, and neither went beyond the sixth grade in school. After high school, Alberto enlisted in the Air Force and later won a spot at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. But he left after two years, graduated from Rice University in Houston and earned a law degree from Harvard.

Soon after Bush won his first race as governor of Texas, he recruited Gonzales, and the two have worked together since, except for Gonzales' two-year stint on the Texas Supreme Court.

As White House counsel, Gonzales has moved to strengthen Bush's power as a wartime commander by saying, for example, that the president on his own authority can designate terrorism suspects as "enemy combatants" and lock them up without criminal charges, a trial or even access to a lawyer.

At the same time, he has moved to shield the White House from outside scrutiny. His office refused a request from the General Accounting Office to learn who met with Vice President Cheney when he was formulating the administration's energy plan.

The GAO went to court, but the administration won the first round when Judge John Bates, a new Bush appointee, threw out the lawsuit.

Gonzales also won plaudits from conservatives for ending the American Bar Assn.'s long-standing special role in evaluating judicial nominees and for surrounding himself with young lawyers with conservative credentials. They include Brett Kavanaugh, 37, formerly a key staffer for Independent Counsel Kenneth W. Starr and the reputed author of much of the "Starr Report" that called for President Clinton's impeachment.

Nonetheless, many conservatives have remained wary of Gonzales, believing he has a moderate-to-liberal view on issues such as affirmative action and abortion.

A key test will come in the next three weeks when the White House must decide whether to intervene in the pending Supreme Court case involving the University of Michigan's affirmative action policy.

Last year, in an interview with The Times, Gonzales said he was not troubled with the notion of using a person's race or ethnicity as one factor in their favor.

"I know that I've been helped because of my ethnicity," he said. "Personally, I'm not offended that race is a factor. But it should never be the overriding factor or the most important factor."

That moderate position on affirmative action is troubling to many conservatives, who hope that the White House will side with Rehnquist and Scalia in calling for a strict ban on the use of race in college admissions.

"There has been a worry from the beginning among conservatives that Gonzales is not reliable on abortion and racial preferences, two very important issues for conservatives," said Roger Clegg, general counsel for the Center for Equal Opportunity. "I think the president's base feels very strongly about this issue, and they'll be very unhappy if the administration goes the wrong way on it."

The Nation Bush Ally Is Top Contender for Nomination to Supreme Court If a vacancy occurs as anticipated, Alberto Gonzales could become the first Latino justice.
David G. Savage
Times Staff Writer

WASHINGTON -- White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, the soft-spoken son of migrant farm workers, has emerged as the overwhelming favorite for a Supreme Court nomination in the months ahead, a move that would give President Bush a historic and politically powerful chance to name the first Latino to the nation's highest court.

(Publication page references are not available for this document.)

Gonzales' ascension has been remarkable -- from a childhood home without hot running water, to Harvard Law School, to the White House. He has been a trusted friend of the president since Bush recruited him as a general counsel when he was elected governor of Texas in 1994.

Now the 47-year-old former Texas Supreme Court justice is in charge of the process for recommending a Supreme Court nominee.

Two years ago, Dick Cheney, another trusted Bush advisor, was put in charge of selecting a running mate for Bush and emerged with the job.

The process could repeat itself.

"He has a huge lead over everyone else," one administration official said of Gonzales.

If Bush names Gonzales to replace Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, a prospect that is becoming more likely, conservatives worry that the president will shift the high court to the left, not the right, on key issues such as affirmative action and abortion.

(Publication page references are not available for this document.)

The usual speculation over a Supreme Court vacancy grew more intense after November, when Republicans retook the Senate. Rehnquist, 78, had said he preferred to step down when a Republican president could fill his seat.

And all of the justices say they do not want to retire during a presidential election year. So, if 2004 is out, that means 2003 is the year for Rehnquist and possibly Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, to retire.

Rehnquist has been hobbled by knee surgery since late November. A few days before Christmas, the chief justice, walking slowly with a cane, went to see Bush at the White House. The unannounced visit has only heightened speculation that he will retire at the end of the court's term in late June.

Rehnquist took his seat on the Supreme Court in January 1972, the fourth and final nominee of President Nixon.

He compiled an unwaveringly conservative record on matters ranging from crime and the death penalty to abortion, religion, affirmative action and free speech. President Reagan elevated him to be chief justice of the United States in 1986.

(Publication page references are not available for this document.)

Rehnquist is fond of saying that as chief justice he has only one vote, the same as his eight colleagues. But filling Rehnquist's seat as chief justice could pose a special problem for the White House. At first glance, some legal experts say Gonzales lacks stature and experience as a federal judge. But other options also do not appear promising on second glance, administration lawyers say.

One popular choice would be to elevate O'Connor, the first woman to serve on the high court. If Bush named her to replace Rehnquist and chose Gonzales to fill her seat, the president would get credit for two historic firsts. O'Connor would be the first woman to head a branch of the U.S. government.

But in a television interview this year, O'Connor herself offered the best counterargument. "I'm too old," she replied firmly when asked about her possible promotion.

Conservatives would be happier if Bush promoted Justice Antonin Scalia, 66. While O'Connor has voted to preserve the right to abortion, the ban on official school prayers and the Miranda decision that allows criminal suspects to remain silent, Scalia has voted to reverse all three.

(Publication page references are not available for this document.)

Scalia, along with Rehnquist and Justice Clarence Thomas, form the court's conservative wing. During the presidential campaign, Bush cited Scalia as his favorite justice.

But liberal activists and Senate Democrats could unite against a Scalia nomination. An easy confirmation for Gonzales would turn into a bitter fight if his nomination is coupled with Scalia's elevation.

"It would be a risk to go with Scalia. I wonder whether the Senate would confirm him," said Nan Aron, who heads the liberal Alliance for Justice.

Liberal Republicans, such as Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, played a key role in killing the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert Bork in 1987. A supporter of abortion rights, Specter said he wouldn't vote for a court nominee who was determined to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

Scalia has vowed to oppose the abortion right at every opportunity. Specter, a senior Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, would stand as an important obstacle to his confirmation.

If Rehnquist and O'Connor were to retire in the spring, Bush could nominate J. Harvie Wilkinson, the chief judge of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in Virginia.

He is a well-liked and highly esteemed conservative judge whose past includes clerking for Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, working as a lawyer in the Reagan administration and serving as editorial page editor at the (Norfolk) Virginian-Pilot.

Wilkinson, 58, has been at the top of the White House list of candidates. Two weeks ago, Gonzales chose as deputy White House counsel David Leitch, a 41-year-old lawyer who clerked for Wilkinson and Rehnquist.

But unlike with Gonzales, Bush would not get a political boost from naming Wilkinson to the Supreme Court.

Other leading candidates include Arizona Republican Sen. Jon Kyl, a favorite of Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft; Deputy Atty. Gen. Larry Thompson; and Judge J. Michael Luttig, a conservative who worked in the first Bush White House.

Last year, conservatives focused their hopes on Miguel Estrada, a native of

Honduras and Bush's nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. If he had been confirmed, he could have emerged as an alternative to Gonzales. But the Democrats have stalled his confirmation, leaving the way clear for Gonzales.

He was born in San Antonio, the second of eight children of Pablo and Maria Gonzales. The two had met as teenage farm workers, and neither went beyond the sixth grade in school. After high school, Alberto enlisted in the Air Force and later won a spot at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. But he left after two years, graduated from Rice University in Houston and earned a law degree from Harvard.

Soon after Bush won his first race as governor of Texas, he recruited Gonzales, and the two have worked together since, except for Gonzales' two-year stint on the Texas Supreme Court.

As White House counsel, Gonzales has moved to strengthen Bush's power as a wartime commander by saying, for example, that the president on his own authority can designate terrorism suspects as "enemy combatants" and lock them up without criminal charges, a trial or even access to a lawyer.

(Publication page references are not available for this document.)

At the same time, he has moved to shield the White House from outside scrutiny. His office refused a request from the General Accounting Office to learn who met with Vice President Cheney when he was formulating the administration's energy plan.

The GAO went to court, but the administration won the first round when Judge John Bates, a new Bush appointee, threw out the lawsuit.

Gonzales also won plaudits from conservatives for ending the American Bar Assn.'s long-standing special role in evaluating judicial nominees and for surrounding himself with young lawyers with conservative credentials. They include Brett Kavanaugh, 37, formerly a key staffer for Independent Counsel Kenneth W. Starr and the reputed author of much of the "Starr Report" that called for President Clinton's impeachment.

Nonetheless, many conservatives have remained wary of Gonzales, believing he has a moderate-to-liberal view on issues such as affirmative action and abortion.

A key test will come in the next three weeks when the White House must decide whether to intervene in the pending Supreme Court case involving the University of Michigan's affirmative action policy.

Last year, in an interview with The Times, Gonzales said he was not troubled with the notion of using a person's race or ethnicity as one factor in their favor.

"I know that I've been helped because of my ethnicity," he said. "Personally, I'm not offended that race is a factor. But it should never be the overriding factor or the most important factor."

That moderate position on affirmative action is troubling to many conservatives, who hope that the White House will side with Rehnquist and Scalia in calling for a strict ban on the use of race in college admissions.

"There has been a worry from the beginning among conservatives that Gonzales is not reliable on abortion and racial preferences, two very important issues for conservatives," said Roger Clegg, general counsel for the Center for Equal Opportunity. "I think the president's base feels very strongly about this issue, and they'll be very unhappy if the administration goes the wrong way on it."

Didn't mean to scare you -- I was just doing WH + DOJ (and a small handful of other people who likely won't attend anyway), as you advised! Like I said, I don't know what the standards are for such things; I assume most people don't actually attend.

I've pared down the list and prepared the following text that you should be able to place in a "TO" or "BCC" line pretty easily:

701 sounds good; I don't know what the bar is like at the other two places. But I'm very flexible.

Sure, I'll send you some e-mail addresses. How many should we invite?

Signatures? 901? TenPenh? Much better choices that over at the White.

Also Jim, is there any way you can share your extensive e-mail list with us to e-mail the invitation?

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Religious code words
Robert Novak - August 11, 2003
Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- The Senate was in its August recess last week, but the Knights of Columbus were meeting in Washington. The world's largest Catholic fraternal organization Thursday passed a resolution condemning opposition to federal judicial nominees because of "deeply held beliefs" stemming from their Catholic faith. That follows intense debate on the Senate floor just before the Senate recessed.

On the evening of July 30, the usually circumspect senators engaged in a rare confrontation over religion. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, third-ranking in the Republican leadership and a daily Catholic communicant, accused colleagues of establishing a prohibition for the federal judiciary of anybody with "deep faith in Catholicism, having to subscribe to the church's teaching on abortion." Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, assistant Democratic floor leader and a pro-choice Catholic, responded passionately that Santorum and other Republicans "have crossed a line they never should have crossed" in charging anti-Catholic bias.

It is the Democrats who have gone a bridge too far, in the view of Santorum and the mainstream of Republican senators. Multiple blockages of President Bush's judicial nominees constitute a ticking time bomb in the Senate, and religion is the detonator. The resolution by the Knights of Columbus signals that this is no mere Capitol Hill debate but derives from America's grass roots.

Once George W. Bush was elected, Democratic leaders vowed to prevent confirmation of all unacceptable nominations to the federal bench, preparing for the day that Supreme Court vacancies are filled. Filibusters blocking at least six pending nominees produced Republican frustration and now raise the question of a religious test.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

On May 1 in a Senate Judiciary Committee session, Schumer raised religious questions in connection with the nomination of lawyer J. Leon Holmes as district judge from Arkansas. Holmes has the support of his state's two Democratic senators, but not Chuck Schumer. The New Yorker argued that the conservative religious views of Holmes, a devout Catholic, disqualified him because of disagreements interpreting the separation of church and state. Schumer contended that "religious beliefs cannot dictate government policy, even though they can infuse our values."

That was preparation for Schumer's opposition to Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for the appellate bench, another conservative Catholic who is the most recent of the filibustered Bush nominees. In the Judiciary Committee June 11, Schumer said Pryor's beliefs "are so well known, so deeply held that it's very hard to believe that they're not going to influence" him on the bench. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, another Judiciary member, also has cited the "deeply held beliefs" standard.

Carl Anderson, chief executive officer of the Knights of Columbus, protested the "deeply held beliefs" description in a July 30 letter to the Judiciary Committee. His organization's resolution passed last Thursday suggested using those words pose a prohibited religious test.

"I think there is a willingness to play to anti-Catholic views by the use of certain code words, and I think there is disproportional impact on Catholics," Anderson told me. He added that Democratic senators "think they can get away with it, but as more and more Catholics find out, it's going to cause a backlash."

At the May 1 Judiciary Committee hearing, freshman Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina responded to Schumer's attack on Leon Holmes with a mild admonition about taking views on a "religious matter" out of context: "I wish we would all (stop) trying to take a quote or a statement or a sentence and construct an image of an individual most of us don't know to basically destroy their career." Three months later, Southern Baptist Graham is furious about religious code words and promises an explosion after Labor Day.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

WASHINGTON -- The Senate was in its August recess last week, but the Knights of Columbus were meeting in Washington. The world's largest Catholic fraternal organization Thursday passed a resolution condemning opposition to federal judicial nominees because of "deeply held beliefs" stemming from their Catholic faith. That follows intense debate on the Senate floor just before the Senate recessed.

On the evening of July 30, the usually circumspect senators engaged in a rare confrontation over religion. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, third-ranking in the Republican leadership and a daily Catholic communicant, accused colleagues of establishing a prohibition for the federal judiciary of anybody with "deep faith in Catholicism, having to subscribe to the church's teaching on abortion." Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, assistant Democratic floor leader and a pro-choice Catholic, responded passionately that Santorum and other Republicans "have crossed a line they never should have crossed" in charging anti-Catholic bias.

It is the Democrats who have gone a bridge too far, in the view of Santorum and the mainstream of Republican senators. Multiple blockages of President Bush's judicial nominees constitute a ticking time bomb in the Senate, and religion is the detonator. The resolution by the Knights of Columbus signals that this is no mere Capitol Hill debate but derives from America's grass roots.

Once George W. Bush was elected, Democratic leaders vowed to prevent confirmation of all unacceptable nominations to the federal bench, preparing for the day that Supreme Court vacancies are filled. Filibusters blocking at least six pending nominees produced Republican frustration and now raise the question of a religious test.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

On May 1 in a Senate Judiciary Committee session, Schumer raised religious questions in connection with the nomination of lawyer J. Leon Holmes as district judge from Arkansas. Holmes has the support of his state's two Democratic senators, but not Chuck Schumer. The New Yorker argued that the conservative religious views of Holmes, a devout Catholic, disqualified him because of disagreements interpreting the separation of church and state. Schumer contended that "religious beliefs cannot dictate government policy, even though they can infuse our values."

That was preparation for Schumer's opposition to Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for the appellate bench, another conservative Catholic who is the most recent of the filibustered Bush nominees. In the Judiciary Committee June 11, Schumer said Pryor's beliefs "are so well known, so deeply held that it's very hard to believe that they're not going to influence" him on the bench. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, another Judiciary member, also has cited the "deeply held beliefs" standard.

Carl Anderson, chief executive officer of the Knights of Columbus, protested the "deeply held beliefs" description in a July 30 letter to the Judiciary Committee. His organization's resolution passed last Thursday suggested using those words pose a prohibited religious test.

"I think there is a willingness to play to anti-Catholic views by the use of certain code words, and I think there is disproportional impact on Catholics," Anderson told me. He added that Democratic senators "think they can get away with it, but as more and more Catholics find out, it's going to cause a backlash."

At the May 1 Judiciary Committee hearing, freshman Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina responded to Schumer's attack on Leon Holmes with a mild admonition about taking views on a "religious matter" out of context: "I wish we would all (stop) trying to take a quote or a statement or a sentence and construct an image of an individual most of us don't know to basically destroy their career." Three months later, Southern Baptist Graham is furious about religious code words and promises an explosion after Labor Day.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

On May 1 in a Senate Judiciary Committee session, Schumer raised religious questions in connection with the nomination of lawyer J. Leon Holmes as district judge from Arkansas. Holmes has the support of his state's two Democratic senators, but not Chuck Schumer. The New Yorker argued that the conservative religious views of Holmes, a devout Catholic, disqualified him because of disagreements interpreting the separation of church and state. Schumer contended that "religious beliefs cannot dictate government policy, even though they can infuse our values."

That was preparation for Schumer's opposition to Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for the appellate bench, another conservative Catholic who is the most recent of the filibustered Bush nominees. In the Judiciary Committee June 11, Schumer said Pryor's beliefs "are so well known, so deeply held that it's very hard to believe that they're not going to influence" him on the bench. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, another Judiciary member, also has cited the "deeply held beliefs" standard.

Carl Anderson, chief executive officer of the Knights of Columbus, protested the "deeply held beliefs" description in a July 30 letter to the Judiciary Committee. His organization's resolution passed last Thursday suggested using those words pose a prohibited religious test.

"I think there is a willingness to play to anti-Catholic views by the use of certain code words, and I think there is disproportional impact on Catholics," Anderson told me. He added that Democratic senators "think they can get away with it, but as more and more Catholics find out, it's going to cause a backlash."

At the May 1 Judiciary Committee hearing, freshman Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina responded to Schumer's attack on Leon Holmes with a mild admonition about taking views on a "religious matter" out of context: "I wish we would all (stop) trying to take a quote or a statement or a sentence and construct an image of an individual most of us don't know to basically destroy their career." Three months later, Southern Baptist Graham is furious about religious code words and promises an explosion after Labor Day.

This was pretty big. And you are correct; they have not editorialized on this to date. Once this turned to the religious (Catholic) litmus test, this issue started to reach "ordinary" folks. We're hearing from a lot of people in NH on this issue. This will help bring this to the attention of more people. I can't wait for the Senate presidential candidates to get asked about this up there. Catholics across the country have had a tough stretch as everyone well knows. But it's been torturous for Catholics in the Boston Archdiocese, which includes NH. No one likes to be kicked when they're down. And people are talking about this after mass. My boss and I are both Catholic.

Religious code words
Robert Novak - August 11, 2003
Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- The Senate was in its August recess last week, but the Knights of Columbus were meeting in Washington. The world's largest Catholic fraternal organization Thursday passed a resolution condemning opposition to federal judicial nominees because of "deeply held beliefs" stemming from their Catholic faith. That follows intense debate on the Senate floor just before the Senate recessed.

On the evening of July 30, the usually circumspect senators engaged in a rare confrontation over religion. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, third-ranking in the Republican leadership and a daily Catholic communicant, accused colleagues of establishing a prohibition for the federal judiciary of anybody with "deep faith in Catholicism, having to subscribe to the church's teaching on abortion." Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, assistant Democratic floor leader and a pro-choice Catholic, responded passionately that Santorum and other Republicans "have crossed a line they never should have crossed" in charging anti-Catholic bias.

It is the Democrats who have gone a bridge too far, in the view of Santorum and the mainstream of Republican senators. Multiple blockages of President Bush's judicial nominees constitute a ticking time bomb in the Senate, and religion is the detonator. The resolution by the Knights of Columbus signals that this is no mere Capitol Hill debate but derives from America's grass roots.

Once George W. Bush was elected, Democratic leaders vowed to prevent confirmation of all unacceptable nominations to the federal bench, preparing for the day that Supreme Court vacancies are filled. Filibusters blocking at least six pending nominees produced Republican frustration and now raise the question of a religious test.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Religious code words
Robert Novak - August 11, 2003
Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- The Senate was in its August recess last week, but the Knights of Columbus were meeting in Washington. The world's largest Catholic fraternal organization Thursday passed a resolution condemning opposition to federal judicial nominees because of "deeply held beliefs" stemming from their Catholic faith. That follows intense debate on the Senate floor just before the Senate recessed.

On the evening of July 30, the usually circumspect senators engaged in a rare confrontation over religion. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, third-ranking in the Republican leadership and a daily Catholic communicant, accused colleagues of establishing a prohibition for the federal judiciary of anybody with "deep faith in Catholicism, having to subscribe to the church's teaching on abortion." Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, assistant Democratic floor leader and a pro-choice Catholic, responded passionately that Santorum and other Republicans "have crossed a line they never should have crossed" in charging anti-Catholic bias.

It is the Democrats who have gone a bridge too far, in the view of Santorum and the mainstream of Republican senators. Multiple blockages of President Bush's judicial nominees constitute a ticking time bomb in the Senate, and religion is the detonator. The resolution by the Knights of Columbus signals that this is no mere Capitol Hill debate but derives from America's grass roots.

Once George W. Bush was elected, Democratic leaders vowed to prevent confirmation of all unacceptable nominations to the federal bench, preparing for the day that Supreme Court vacancies are filled. Filibusters blocking at least six pending nominees produced Republican frustration and now raise the question of a religious test.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

On May 1 in a Senate Judiciary Committee session, Schumer raised religious questions in connection with the nomination of lawyer J. Leon Holmes as district judge from Arkansas. Holmes has the support of his state's two Democratic senators, but not Chuck Schumer. The New Yorker argued that the conservative religious views of Holmes, a devout Catholic, disqualified him because of disagreements interpreting the separation of church and state. Schumer contended that "religious beliefs cannot dictate government policy, even though they can infuse our values."

That was preparation for Schumer's opposition to Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for the appellate bench, another conservative Catholic who is the most recent of the filibustered Bush nominees. In the Judiciary Committee June 11, Schumer said Pryor's beliefs "are so well known, so deeply held that it's very hard to believe that they're not going to influence" him on the bench. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, another Judiciary member, also has cited the "deeply held beliefs" standard.

Carl Anderson, chief executive officer of the Knights of Columbus, protested the "deeply held beliefs" description in a July 30 letter to the Judiciary Committee. His organization's resolution passed last Thursday suggested using those words pose a prohibited religious test.

"I think there is a willingness to play to anti-Catholic views by the use of certain code words, and I think there is disproportional impact on Catholics," Anderson told me. He added that Democratic senators "think they can get away with it, but as more and more Catholics find out, it's going to cause a backlash."

At the May 1 Judiciary Committee hearing, freshman Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina responded to Schumer's attack on Leon Holmes with a mild admonition about taking views on a "religious matter" out of context: "I wish we would all (stop) trying to take a quote or a statement or a sentence and construct an image of an individual most of us don't know to basically destroy their career." Three months later, Southern Baptist Graham is furious about religious code words and promises an explosion after Labor Day.

Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- The Senate was in its August recess last week, but the Knights of Columbus were meeting in Washington. The world's largest Catholic fraternal organization Thursday passed a resolution condemning opposition to federal judicial nominees because of "deeply held beliefs" stemming from their Catholic faith. That follows intense debate on the Senate floor just before the Senate recessed.

On the evening of July 30, the usually circumspect senators engaged in a rare confrontation over religion. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, third-ranking in the Republican leadership and a daily Catholic communicant, accused colleagues of establishing a prohibition for the federal judiciary of anybody with "deep faith in Catholicism, having to subscribe to the church's teaching on abortion." Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, assistant Democratic floor leader and a pro-choice Catholic, responded passionately that Santorum and other Republicans "have crossed a line they never should have crossed" in charging anti-Catholic bias.

It is the Democrats who have gone a bridge too far, in the view of Santorum and the mainstream of Republican senators. Multiple blockages of President Bush's judicial nominees constitute a ticking time bomb in the Senate, and religion is the detonator. The resolution by the Knights of Columbus signals that this is no mere Capitol Hill debate but derives from America's grass roots.

Once George W. Bush was elected, Democratic leaders vowed to prevent confirmation of all unacceptable nominations to the federal bench, preparing for the day that Supreme Court vacancies are filled. Filibusters blocking at least six pending nominees produced Republican frustration and now raise the question of a religious test.

At the center of this increasingly noisome debate is the aggressive Sen. Charles Schumer. Elected from New York in 1998 by ousting Republican Alfonse D'Amato in a tumultuous campaign, Schumer has grown in confidence and assertiveness as he nears virtually unopposed re-election next year with a massive war chest. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is the backroom mastermind of the Democratic judicial strategy, but Schumer is its point man. It is he who has taken the debate into previously forbidden religious territory.

On May 1 in a Senate Judiciary Committee session, Schumer raised religious questions in connection with the nomination of lawyer J. Leon Holmes as district judge from Arkansas. Holmes has the support of his state's two Democratic senators, but not Chuck Schumer. The New Yorker argued that the conservative religious views of Holmes, a devout Catholic, disqualified him because of disagreements interpreting the separation of church and state. Schumer contended that "religious beliefs cannot dictate government policy, even though they can infuse our values."

That was preparation for Schumer's opposition to Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for the appellate bench, another conservative Catholic who is the most recent of the filibustered Bush nominees. In the Judiciary Committee June 11, Schumer said Pryor's beliefs "are so well known, so deeply held that it's very hard to believe that they're not going to influence" him on the bench. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, another Judiciary member, also has cited the "deeply held beliefs" standard.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Friday, January 23, 2004
Draft #3

- Welcome to the White House. It's an honor to host the World Champion Florida Marlins. Congratulations on your success. You have earned the right to be called champs, and you have created lasting memories for fans throughout the state of Florida. And I've heard a lot of bragging from one of your biggest fans – your Governor.
- On Pudge Rodriguez's first day with the team, he told us that 2003 would be the Year of the Marlin. There were times last season when Pudge's prediction wasn't looking very good. You got off to a slow start ... made the playoffs as a wild card ... fell behind in playoff series ... and yet you came back to become World Series champs. Pudge was right – 2003 turned out to be the Year of the Marlin, and everyone in the Marlins organization can be proud.

Acknowledgments

- Governor Jeb Bush (R-FL)
- Congressman Howard Coble (R-NC)
- Congressman Porter Goss (R-FL)
- Congressman Mark Foley (R-FL)
- Mayor Manny Diaz, City of Miami (I)
- Jeff Loria, Owner, Florida Marlins, and wife, Sivia (siv-EE-ah)
- David Samson, President, Florida Marlins, and wife Cindi
- Larry Beinfest [BINE-fest], General Manager, Florida Marlins
- Jack McKeon, Manager, Florida Marlins
- Ozzie Guillen, Manager, Chicago White Sox; former third base coach, Florida Marlins
- Andre Dawson, Special Advisor, Florida Marlins; eight-time All-Star and Gold Glove winner
- Tony Perez, advisor, Florida Marlins; Hall of Fame member and seven-time All-Star
- Florida Marlins Baseball Team Members
- You turned your season around and became champs for a few basic reasons: You used every ounce of your talent, you played as a team, and you were determined to win. This team had three Gold Glove winners. You fielded a solid lineup, from Juan Pierre at the top to Alex Gonzales at the bottom. And you relied on a strong crop of young pitchers – Brad Penny, the D-Train [not present], and a Texan who saved his best pitching for the World Series: Josh Beckett.

- To win the World Series, every member of this team set high standards on the diamond – and now that you’re champs, you have a responsibility to meet those standards away from the field as well. Millions of kids in America grow up wanting to play like the Florida Marlins, and they are watching the way you conduct yourselves all the time. It’s important for you, and for all professional athletes, to set the right example for children in this country.
- I have confidence that you will uphold your duties as champions, because I have seen your character in the dedication to your community you have already shown:
 - The Marlins management contributes to Florida’s “Adopt-A-Classroom” program, which helps local teachers purchase extra supplies to make learning more fun for students. The Marlins are also continuing the strong tradition of big leaguers supporting youth baseball – including through the Josh Beckett Youth Baseball tournament, which will celebrate its fifth anniversary this year.
 - For more than two years, A.J. Burnett has worked with the Florida Division of the Center for Missing and Exploited Children. He volunteers his time to tape ads and host events that show children how to be safer and publicize information about abducted children. A.J.’s work is getting results: more than 30 children featured on his “Play It Safe” days at Marlins games have been rescued.
 - Juan Pierre organized “Pierre’s Pack” to introduce underprivileged children to the game of baseball. Every month he treats a group of kids to box seats, tee-shirts, and a bus to Pro Player Stadium to watch a Marlins game.
- I appreciate the good and hopeful work you are doing in your communities, and I respect your excellence on the field. You are bringing thrills to your fans, and inspiration to young people everywhere.

Congratulations on being World Series champs, and good luck this season.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower

By Jeff Gannon

Talon News

December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Don't do a side phonetic for adoptuskids -- just do a substitute if that makes sense

Ok. I'll make that change.

Changes I'm making to Adoption:

- Change James Oberstar to Jim
- fiancée (with accent on first e) - spelling change
- phonetic for website
- Brett's changes re: deleting the word "stage" on cards 10 and 16

- I think we're just waiting on the phonetic for Araceli Zarate. Any other outstanding issues or things I need to fix?

When the fiancée is a woman, it is spelled fiancée, with the accent on the first e. We are checking into phonetics for some of the other folks. Thanks.

Brett: DOJ has put together some talking points regarding you, and we have made some edits. We figured you would welcome the opportunity to review and comment, and any comments or corrections are welcome.

BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

Nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit

- Brett Kavanaugh is a well-respected attorney and highly qualified candidate for the DC Circuit, with overwhelming bi-partisan support from the legal community. The ABA rated Mr. Kavanaugh “Well Qualified” to serve on the DC Circuit.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh graduated from Yale College and Yale Law School, having served as the Notes Editor on the prestigious Yale Law Journal.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has practiced law in Washington D.C., both in the private and public sectors, for more than a decade. He was a partner at the law firm of Kirkland & Ellis, and has an outstanding reputation in the legal community.
 - Judge Walter Stapleton said of Mr. Kavanaugh, “He really is a superstar. He is a rare match of talent and personality.” Delaware Law Weekly, May 22, 2002.
 - After arguing against Mr. Kavanaugh in the Supreme Court, Washington attorney Jim Hamilton stated, “Brett is a lawyer of great competency, and he will be a force in this town for some time to come.” News Conference with James Hamilton, Federal News Service, June 25, 1998.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has extensive experience in the appellate courts, both as a clerk and as counsel.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, as well as Judge Walter Stapleton of the Third Circuit and Judge Alex Kozinsky of the Ninth Circuit.
 - ✓ Prior to his Supreme Court clerkship, Mr. Kavanaugh earned a prestigious fellowship in the Office of the Solicitor General of the United States. The Solicitor General’s office serves as the appellate lawyer to the federal government.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has argued both civil and criminal matters before the Supreme Court and appellate courts throughout the country.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has dedicated the majority of his career to public service in both the Executive and Judicial branches.
 - ✓ In addition to his service for three appellate judges and his work at the Department of Justice, Mr. Kavanaugh has worked at the White House since 2001.
 - ✓ He currently serves as Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary, and previously was Senior Associate and Associate Counsel to the President.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh served as an Associate Counsel in the Office of Independent Counsel.
- While in private practice, Mr. Kavanaugh regularly took on pro bono matters in courts across the country.
 - ✓ Along with prominent Democrat attorneys Kendall Coffey and Manny Diaz – now the Democratic Mayor of Miami, Mr. Kavanaugh represented the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in seeking a rehearing before the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals and in a petition for certiorari from the Supreme Court.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh represented the Adat Shalom congregation in Montgomery County, Maryland against the attempt to stop the construction of a synagogue in the county.
- Mr. Kavanaugh believes in giving back to his community.
 - ✓ In addition to being active in his church, Mr. Kavanaugh has coached youth basketball and participated in other community activities such as building a playground in a disadvantaged neighborhood.

Ok. I'll make that change.

Changes I'm making to Adoption:

- Change James Oberstar to Jim
- fiancée (with accent on first e) - spelling change
- phonetic for website
- Brett's changes re: deleting the word "stage" on cards 10 and 16

- I think we're just waiting on the phonetic for Araceli Zarate. Any other outstanding issues or things I need to fix?

When the fiancée is a woman, it is spelled fiancée, with the accent on the first e. We are checking into phonetics for some of the other folks. Thanks.

Manny, our mutual friend, has CORRECTED his participation list to now include chafee and mccain, as they did walk in the procession at the beginning of the debate. And, they have supported every nominee.

Given this snafu, is it possible to quickly add these two and create autopenned "participation" letters?
I would be most appreciative.

Brett: DOJ has put together some talking points regarding you, and we have made some edits. We figured you would welcome the opportunity to review and comment, and any comments or corrections are welcome.

BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

Nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit

- Brett Kavanaugh is a well-respected attorney and highly qualified candidate for the DC Circuit, with overwhelming bi-partisan support from the legal community. The ABA rated Mr. Kavanaugh "Well Qualified" to serve on the DC Circuit.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh graduated from Yale College and Yale Law School, having served as the Notes Editor on the prestigious Yale Law Journal.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has practiced law in Washington D.C., both in the private and public sectors, for more than a decade. He was a partner at the law firm of Kirkland & Ellis, and has an outstanding reputation in the legal community.
 - Judge Walter Stapleton said of Mr. Kavanaugh, "He really is a superstar. He is a rare match of talent and personality." Delaware Law Weekly, May 22, 2002.
 - After arguing against Mr. Kavanaugh in the Supreme Court, Washington attorney Jim Hamilton stated, "Brett is a lawyer of great competency, and he will be a force in this town for some time to come." News Conference with James Hamilton, Federal News Service, June 25, 1998.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has extensive experience in the appellate courts, both as a clerk and as counsel.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, as well as Judge Walter Stapleton of the Third Circuit and Judge Alex Kozinsky of the Ninth Circuit.
 - ✓ Prior to his Supreme Court clerkship, Mr. Kavanaugh earned a prestigious fellowship in the Office of the Solicitor General of the United States. The Solicitor General's office serves as the appellate lawyer to the federal government.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has argued both civil and criminal matters before the Supreme Court and appellate courts throughout the country.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has dedicated the majority of his career to public service in both the Executive and Judicial branches.
 - ✓ In addition to his service for three appellate judges and his work at the Department of Justice, Mr. Kavanaugh has worked at the White House since 2001.
 - ✓ He currently serves as Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary, and previously was Senior Associate and Associate Counsel to the President.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh served as an Associate Counsel in the Office of Independent Counsel.
- While in private practice, Mr. Kavanaugh regularly took on pro bono matters in courts across the country.
 - ✓ Along with prominent Democrat attorneys Kendall Coffey and Manny Diaz – now the Democratic Mayor of Miami, Mr. Kavanaugh represented the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in seeking a rehearing before the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals and in a petition for certiorari from the Supreme Court.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh represented the Adat Shalom congregation in Montgomery County, Maryland against the attempt to stop the construction of a synagogue in the county.
- Mr. Kavanaugh believes in giving back to his community.

- ✓ In addition to being active in his church, Mr. Kavanaugh has coached youth basketball and participated in other community activities such as building a playground in a disadvantaged neighborhood.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unrelentingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

For Pittsburgh:

John Perzel [pur-ZELL]

Jerome "The Bus" Bettis [BEH-tis]

Leslie Gromis [GROH-mis] Baker (Gromis Baker is her last name. Do we need to indicate that or is it implied since both names are written? Same with Christine Toretta Olson.)

Susan Giver [GIH-ver]

(I realize the pronunciation of Gromis and Giver may be obvious, but just in case.)

Ok. I'll make that change.

Changes I'm making to Adoption:

- Change James Oberstar to Jim
- fiancée (with accent on first e) - spelling change
- phonetic for website
- Brett's changes re: deleting the word "stage" on cards 10 and 16

- I think we're just waiting on the phonetic for Araceli Zarate. Any other outstanding issues or things I need to fix?

When the fiancée is a woman, it is spelled fiancée, with the accent on the first e. We are checking into phonetics for some of the other folks. Thanks.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Only ones I know are adoption: Chris and Dee-anna we have from them. Emily was looking for the fiancée, but I don't thin she found a contact yet.

Have we nailed down the listed phonetics on these with people themselves or with people who definitely know?

When the fiancée is a woman, it is spelled fiancée, with the accent on the first e. We are checking into phonetics for some of the other folks. Thanks.

Ok. I'll make that change.

Changes I'm making to Adoption:

- Change James Oberstar to Jim
- fiancée (with accent on first e) - spelling change
- phonetic for website
- Brett's changes re: deleting the word "stage" on cards 10 and 16

- I think we're just waiting on the phonetic for Araceli Zarate. Any other outstanding issues or things I need to fix?

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower
By Jeff Gannon
Talon News
December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Support Grows For Judicial Memo Whistleblower
By Jeff Gannon
Talon News
December 3, 2003

WASHINGTON (Talon News) -- A Republican staffer on the Senate Judiciary Committee was placed on administrative leave last week in the wake of a U.S. Capitol Police investigation into the release of memos describing strategies for Democrats to use regarding judicial nominees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) told reporters he took the action because, "I am mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

Democrats on the committee have expressed outrage over the memos' release to the Wall Street Journal in which their strategy to delay and defeat President Bush's judicial nominees when they were in the majority was outlined. The memos detailed meetings with liberal groups like People for the American Way and NARAL who suggested which judges to block and the tactics to use against them.

Democrats have remained silent on the content of the memos, instead focusing on how they were obtained.

The unnamed staffer has denied the allegations to investigators. Some suggest that there may have been no criminal activity at all, depending upon when the memos were obtained and considering their content.

It is believed that the memos came from the committee's servers, but it was not until the Republicans took control of the Senate in 2003 that the computers were segregated according to party affiliation. When the Democrats ruled the panel, the servers were accessible to all staffers.

Kay Daly, President of the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary told Talon News, "If Kennedy and Durbin have heartburn over some of these things, they should go see Patrick Leahy."

She pointed out that it was Leahy who opened up the servers when Democrats took control.

She added, "Hatch changed it back. If these were accessed when the Democrats were still in charge, no crime has been committed."

Daly praised the actions of the staffer who blew the whistle on what she considers unethical conduct by Senate Democrats.

She said, "This guy should be given a medal -- he's a hero, he saw wrongdoing and did something about it."

Daly asserts that the content of the memos describes unethical conduct, the most egregious of which is the racial and sexual discrimination against certain judicial nominees. Equally troubling to her is the NAACP's successful attempt to convince Senate Democrats to delay confirming judges to the 6th Circuit to assure that the landmark University of Michigan affirmative action case was decided in their favor.

Jonathan Stein of the Hofstra University Law Review believes that firing the staffer may be unconstitutional under whistleblower laws. He cites several cases to support his argument that the staffer's actions were consistent with his First Amendment Rights.

Gary Aldrich, a former FBI agent and whistleblower on the Clinton White House agreed, but was less certain of the legal basis for such a defense. Still, he urges the staffer to contact the Patrick Henry Center for Individual Liberty, of which he is president and founder for assistance.

Both Aldrich and Daly expressed disappointment in the Republican leadership's capitulation to the Democrat demands on the matter. Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee have yet to apologize, disavow or discipline one of their staffers who authored a memo that Chairman Sen. Pat Roberts (R-KS) called an "attack plan" to use classified information against President Bush in the upcoming election.

Brett: DOJ has put together some talking points regarding you, and we have made some edits. We figured you would welcome the opportunity to review and comment, and any comments or corrections are welcome.

BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

Nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit

- Brett Kavanaugh is a well-respected attorney and highly qualified candidate for the DC Circuit, with overwhelming bi-partisan support from the legal community. The ABA rated Mr. Kavanaugh "Well Qualified" to serve on the DC Circuit.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh graduated from Yale College and Yale Law School, having served as the Notes Editor on the prestigious Yale Law Journal.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has practiced law in Washington D.C., both in the private and public sectors, for more than a decade. He was a partner at the law firm of Kirkland & Ellis, and has an outstanding reputation in the legal community.
 - Judge Walter Stapleton said of Mr. Kavanaugh, "He really is a superstar. He is a rare match of talent and personality." Delaware Law Weekly, May 22, 2002.
 - After arguing against Mr. Kavanaugh in the Supreme Court, Washington attorney Jim Hamilton stated, "Brett is a lawyer of great competency, and he will be a force in this town for some time to come." News Conference with James Hamilton, Federal News Service, June 25, 1998.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has extensive experience in the appellate courts, both as a clerk and as counsel.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, as well as Judge Walter Stapleton of the Third Circuit and Judge Alex Kozinsky of the Ninth Circuit.
 - ✓ Prior to his Supreme Court clerkship, Mr. Kavanaugh earned a prestigious fellowship in the Office of the Solicitor General of the United States. The Solicitor General's office serves as the appellate lawyer to the federal government.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh has argued both civil and criminal matters before the Supreme Court and appellate courts throughout the country.
- Mr. Kavanaugh has dedicated the majority of his career to public service in both the Executive and Judicial branches.
 - ✓ In addition to his service for three appellate judges and his work at the Department of Justice, Mr. Kavanaugh has worked at the White House since 2001.
 - ✓ He currently serves as Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary, and previously was Senior Associate and Associate Counsel to the President.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh served as an Associate Counsel in the Office of Independent Counsel.
- While in private practice, Mr. Kavanaugh regularly took on pro bono matters in courts across the country.
 - ✓ Along with prominent Democrat attorneys Kendall Coffey and Manny Diaz – now the Democratic Mayor of Miami, Mr. Kavanaugh represented the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in seeking a rehearing before the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals and in a petition for certiorari from the Supreme Court.
 - ✓ Mr. Kavanaugh represented the Adat Shalom congregation in Montgomery County, Maryland against the attempt to stop the construction of a synagogue in the county.
- Mr. Kavanaugh believes in giving back to his community.
 - ✓ In addition to being active in his church, Mr. Kavanaugh has coached youth basketball and participated in other community activities such as building a playground in a disadvantaged neighborhood.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

EXT-18-2143-D-000282

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Friday, January 23, 2004
Draft #5

- Welcome to the White House. It's an honor to host the World Champion Florida Marlins. Congratulations on your success. You have earned the right to be called champs, and you have created lasting memories for fans throughout the state of Florida. And I've heard a lot of bragging from one of your biggest fans – your Governor.
- On Pudge Rodriguez's [present] first day with the team, he told us that 2003 would be the Year of the Marlin. There were times last season when Pudge's prediction wasn't looking very good. You got off to a slow start ... made the playoffs as a wild card ... fell behind in playoff series ... and yet you came back to become World Series champs. Pudge was right – 2003 turned out to be the Year of the Marlin, and everyone in the Marlins organization can be proud.

Acknowledgments

- Governor Jeb Bush (R-FL)
- Congressman Porter Goss (R-FL)
- Congressman Mark Foley (R-FL)
- Congressman Howard Coble (R-NC) (Note: He knows Manager Jack McKeon.)
- Mayor Manny Diaz, City of Miami (I)
- Jeff Loria, Owner, Florida Marlins, and wife, Sivia [SIV-ee-ah]
- David Samson, President, Florida Marlins, and wife Cindi
- Larry Beinfest [BINE-fest], General Manager, Florida Marlins
- Jack McKeon, Manager, Florida Marlins
- Ozzie Guillen [GEE-un], Manager, Chicago White Sox; and former third base coach, Florida Marlins
- Andre Dawson, Special Advisor, Florida Marlins; and eight-time All-Star and Gold Glove winner
- Tony Perez, advisor, Florida Marlins; and Hall of Fame member and seven-time All-Star
- Florida Marlins team members, coaches, their families, and front office staff
- Pitching Coach Wayne Rosenthal, former Ranger (played for you in 1991 and six games in 1992)

- First Base Coach Perry Hill, former Rangers coach (1992-1994) (from Bedford, Texas)
- Pitcher Chad Fox (from Westfield, Texas)
- You turned your season around and became champs for a few basic reasons: You used every ounce of your talent, you played as a team, and you were determined to win. This team had two Gold Glove winners. You fielded a solid lineup, from Juan Pierre [present] at the top to Alex Gonzales [not present] at the bottom. And you relied on a strong crop of young pitchers – Brad Penny [present], the D-Train [not present], and a Texan who saved his best pitching for the World Series: Josh Beckett [present].
- To win the World Series, every member of this team set high standards on the diamond – and now that you’re champs, you have a responsibility to meet those standards away from the field as well. Millions of kids in America grow up wanting to play like the Florida Marlins, and they are watching the way you conduct yourselves all the time. It’s important for you, and for all professional athletes, to set the right example for children in this country.
- I have confidence that you will uphold your duties as champions, because I have seen your character in the dedication to your community you have already shown:
 - The Marlins management contributes to Florida’s “Adopt-A-Classroom” program, which helps local teachers purchase extra supplies to make learning more fun for students. The Marlins are also continuing the strong tradition of big leaguers supporting youth baseball – including through the Josh Beckett Youth Baseball tournament, which will be played for the fifth time this year.
 - For more than two years, A.J. Burnett [present] has worked with the Florida Division of the Center for Missing and Exploited Children. He volunteers his time to tape ads and host events that show children how to be safer and publicize information about abducted children. A.J.’s work is getting results: More than 30 children featured on his “Play It Safe” days at Marlins games have been rescued.

- Juan Pierre [present] organized “Pierre’s Pack” to introduce underprivileged children to the game of baseball. Every month he treats a group of kids to box seats, tee-shirts, and a bus to Pro Player Stadium to watch a Marlins game.
- I appreciate the good and hopeful work you are doing in your communities, and I respect your excellence on the field. You are bringing thrills to your fans, and inspiration to young people everywhere. Congratulations on being World Series champs, and good luck this season.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Subject: WH Mess?

Question: Attorney General Abbott and I (along with Mrs. Abbott, their daughter Audrey, and 2 other senior folks) will be in D.C. on M-W (Mar.

15-17) for the National Association of Attorneys General meeting, and the General was wondering if it's possible for someone (Al, Harriet, KR, whomever) to host about 6 of us for lunch @ the Mess, preferably on Tues. noon if possible. Of course, he'll pay whomever for the cost.

(And if other dates/times work better, we can work on that, but Tues. @ noon works best for the General.)

Mr. Staff Secretary *

Would it be possible to get blue-lined copies of the EOs the President signed on Jan. 29, 2001 that created the WH OFBCI and the initial 5 cabinet centers?

Actually, it'd be great to get blue-line version of all 4 EOs, found here:

<http://www.whitehouse.gov/government/fbc/executive-orders.html>

But I drafted the initial two, so they matter most to me.

Thanks, brother.

GREAT seeing you last week. Thanks for taking time to dine w/ the stalwartTexans.

Subject: WH Mess?

Question: Attorney General Abbott and I (along with Mrs. Abbott, their daughter Audrey, and 2 other senior folks) will be in D.C. on M-W (Mar. 15-17) for the National Association of Attorneys General meeting, and the General was wondering if it's possible for someone (Al, Harriet, KR, whomever) to host about 6 of us for lunch @ the Mess, preferably on Tues. noon if possible. Of course, he'll pay whomever for the cost.
(And if other dates/times work better, we can work on that, but Tues. @ noon works best for the General.)

Mr. Staff Secretary *

Would it be possible to get blue-lined copies of the EOs the President signed on Jan. 29, 2001 that created the WH OFBCI and the initial 5 cabinet centers?

Actually, it'd be great to get blue-line version of all 4 EOs, found here:

<http://www.whitehouse.gov/government/fbc/executive-orders.html>

But I drafted the initial two, so they matter most to me.

Thanks, brother.

GREAT seeing you last week. Thanks for taking time to dine w/ the stalwartTexans.

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The New York Post
The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

- THE EDITORS

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

The Condensed Bob Woodward

Slate reads Plan of Attack so you don't have to.

By Bryan Curtis

Want to read Bob Woodward's new book, Plan of Attack, without plowing through all 467 gossip-soaked pages? We can help! Slate has taken Woodward's tome and reduced it to a point-by-point executive summary. Grab a copy from the your nearest bookstore and read along.

Secrets of the Bushies

Page 9: The first sign of the Bush administration's desire to attack Iraq comes days before Bush's 2001 inauguration. Dick Cheney asks outgoing Defense Secretary Bill Cohen to brief the president "about Iraq and different options." During the briefing, Cheney falls asleep.

Page 25: Hours after the Sept. 11 attacks, Donald Rumsfeld asks Pentagon colleagues about the possibility of striking Saddam Hussein. An aide records in his notes: "hit S.H. @ same time—not only UBL [Usama Bin Laden]."

Page 190: In September 2002, Bush tells the press that Iraq can launch a biological or chemical attack within 45 minutes—an assertion that the CIA finds completely phony. Director George Tenet refers to it as the "they-can-attack-in-45-minutes shit."

Page 250: Karl Rove, a Norwegian-American, is obsessed with the "historical duplicity" of the Swedes, who seized Norway back in 1814. This nationalism manifests itself as hatred for Swedish weapons inspector Hans Blix.

Page 290: Paul Wolfowitz, one of the administration's fiercest neocons, entertains wild theories linking al-Qaida to remnants of Cold War spycraft. He wonders whether Bin Laden is in league with former East German intelligence agents. Unnamed "heads of state" warn him that al-Qaida may be working with ex-KGB officers.

Page 324: Saudi ambassador Prince Bandar bin Sultan hints that the Saudi regime will tinker with oil prices to boost the American economy before the 2004 elections.

Colin Powell vs. Dick Cheney and Donald Rumsfeld

Page 25: Much of Woodward's book involves the administration's efforts to marginalize, or completely ignore, Colin Powell. After Rumsfeld and others raise the idea of striking Iraq in response to 9/11, Powell tells Gen. Hugh Shelton, "What the hell! What are these guys thinking about? Can't you get these guys back in the box?"

Page 182-83: Powell reveals that he detests Rumsfeld's circuitous manner of speaking—"One would think ..."; "Some would say ..."—which he dubs "third-person passive once removed."

Page 164-66: Cheney tells a Veterans of Foreign Wars convention on Aug. 26, 2002, that there's "no doubt" Saddam has weapons of mass destruction. Powell goes ballistic at the suggestion.

Page 175: Powell fears that Cheney is losing his mild manner. As the veep presses for quick action against Iraq, "Powell detected a kind of fever in Cheney. He was not the steady, unemotional rock that he had witnessed a dozen years earlier during the run-up to the Gulf War. The vice president was beyond hell-bent for action against Saddam."

Page 269-70: Bush informs Powell of his decision to go to war after he informs Prince Bandar. After conferring with the president, Powell is "semidespondent." (Read Timothy Noah's "Chatterbox" column for more on the timing of Bush's decision.)

Donald Rumsfeld vs. the Generals

Page 14: On Feb. 16, 2001, American and British planes bomb Iraqi targets to enforce the no-fly zones. No one from the Joint Chiefs of Staff bothers to inform the secretary of defense.

Page 6: Pressing for more power, Rumsfeld micromanages Iraq war plans. Gen. Tommy Franks tells him (according to insider accounts), "This ain't going to work. You can fire me. I'm either the commander or I'm not, and you've got to trust me or you don't."

Page 91-92: Bonus Rumsfeld snub: He admits he can't remember vetting Bush's "Axis of Evil" speech, the address that has come to define his foreign policy. "That speech was not particularly in my area," he explains.

Tommy Franks' Inspirational Profanities

Page 115: Franks to lethargic commanders before the Iraq war: "This is fucking serious. You know, if you guys think this is not going to happen, you're wrong. You need to get off your ass."

Page 118: To the Joint Chiefs: "You Title X motherfuckers!"

Page 281: On Douglas Feith, the Pentagon's undersecretary for policy: "I have to deal with the fucking stupidest guy on the face of the earth almost every day."

Condi Rice as Bush's Consigliere

Page 23: "She is not married and has no immediate family; it seemed she was on call for the president 24 hours a day in her West Wing office. ... Tending to the president and his priorities was her primary goal."

Page 127: When Karl Rove worries about the perception in the media that he's meddling in foreign affairs, Bush says: "Don't worry about it. Condi's territorial. She's a woman."

Page 160: Condi dresses down Brent Scowcroft, the former national security adviser, for writing an antiwar editorial in Wall Street Journal. Scowcroft ends his antiwar campaign.

Dick Armitage as Powell's Consigliere

Page 20: Powell and Armitage—whom Woodward describes as a "cross between Daddy Warbucks and a World Wrestling Federation champ"—are best friends. "The two talk on the phone so many times each day that aides think of them as teenagers joined at the hip, committed to sharing absolutely everything."

Page 39: Armitage learns of a forthcoming New York Times story that will paint Powell as exceedingly dovish. He convinces the reporter that the State Department is hip to the Saddam threat. Or, as he later says privately, "Oh, State, they're in the game. They want to get these fuckers."

Page 149: Armitage advises Powell to schedule one-on-one bonding sessions with Bush. Powell reports back, "I think we're really making some headway in the relationship. I know we really connected."

George Tenet's Predictive Powers

Page 116-17: Months before the war begins, Tenet assures Iraq's top Kurdish leaders that the U.S. military will attack the Baathist regime. Bush has issued no such order, but Tenet proves right. As Woodward puts it, "He would sell fucking tea to Chinamen to make sure his officers got protection."

Page 186-87: Bush cites a CIA report that says 71 percent of the French population sees Saddam as a "threat to world peace." The report is bogus—the French vigorously oppose the war.

Page 247-49: At a December 2002 briefing, Tenet's deputy makes the case that Iraq is harboring weapons of mass destruction. Bush says, "I've been told all this intelligence about having WMD and this is the best we've got?" Tenet raises his arms and says, "Don't worry, it's a slam-dunk!" To date, no WMD have been found in Iraq.

Page 387-99: On March 19, 2003, Tenet informs Bush of CIA reports that suggest Saddam and his sons are hiding out on an Iraqi farm. Later, after an airstrike ordered by the president, Tenet says, "Tell the president we got the son of a bitch." Saddam and his sons survive the attack.

Woodward's Table Scraps

Every Woodward production contains a half-dozen throwaway details that would make lesser reporters drool. Here's the best of the lot:

Page 11: Bush as glutton: At a Pentagon briefing, staffers lay out peppermint candy for each attendee. Bush scarfs down his peppermint, and then begins to eye Bill Cohen's treat, which the former secretary gladly relinquishes. Gen. Hugh Shelton, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, "noticed Bush eyeing his mint, so he passed it over."

Page 112: On a Mideast trip, Lynne Cheney lunches with an emir's wife. When do the children here in Bahrain begin school? she asks. The emir's wife reminds Cheney that she's in Qatar.

Page 184: The TelePrompTer text of Bush's climactic speech to the United Nations somehow omits his call for resolutions against the Iraqi regime. Bush remembers and ad-libs the line.

Page 186: Bush aide Nick Calio declares his intention to vitiolate a congressional filibuster. Bush says, "Nicky, what the fuck are you talking about, vitiolate?"

Page 336: A CIA report suggests that Saddam, whose army can barely muster working tanks or planes, has red-and-white submarines patrolling the Tigris River. The agency immediately discards the report.

Page 244: Woodward meets Bush at a White House Christmas party in 2002. Though it's months before the prez would declare war on Iraq, Bush suggests that a sequel to Woodward's previous best seller, Bush at War, should be in the works. "Maybe it will be called More Bush at War," Bush says. Laura Bush responds, "Let's hope not."

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unrelentingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Here is the revised bios for the Radio-TV briefing paper for tomorrow night. For some reason, Georgia didn't include my revised bios in the e-mail that she sent you. I deleted the reference to the Clinton Impeachment in Joe Johns' bio, the Pookie Poo (don't ask) reference in A.J. Jamal's bio, and condensed them down to one page total. Thanks for helping me with this!

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

EXT-18-2143-E-000268

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Here is one paragraph from the final draft of the President's radio address-which should reflect all changes submitted. Will you take a quick look at it and let me know if this is still accurate? Please note the addition of FBI and CIA in the first sentence-which changed from "law enforcement and intelligence." Is that still correct? And also, please note the last sentence was re-worded. We are doing the final sign-off of this right now so it can be sent to the President. Thanks for all your help!

The Patriot Act tore down the artificial wall between the FBI and the CIA – and now people in those agencies are sharing the information needed to hunt terrorists. The Patriot Act also marked a major shift in law enforcement priorities. We are no longer emphasizing simply the investigation of past crimes, but also prevention of further strikes. Because we passed the Patriot Act, FBI agents can better conduct electronic surveillance and wiretaps on certain suspected terrorists. And in tracking suspects, federal investigators can now use tools long permitted against white collar criminals and drug traffickers to serve an urgent purpose – stopping a terrorist attack on our soil.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unrelentingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON — The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive—the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.—Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law—and another big one isn't in the offing—Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Subject: WH Mess?

Question: Attorney General Abbott and I (along with Mrs. Abbott, their daughter Audrey, and 2 other senior folks) will be in D.C. on M-W (Mar.

15-17) for the National Association of Attorneys General meeting, and the General was wondering if it's possible for someone (Al, Harriet, KR, whomever) to host about 6 of us for lunch @ the Mess, preferably on Tues. noon if possible. Of course, he'll pay whomever for the cost.

(And if other dates/times work better, we can work on that, but Tues. @ noon works best for the General.)

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The New York Post
The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

- THE EDITORS

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

- THE EDITORS

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts
